A WONDERFUL WAY TO GIVE THANKS

Local Youth Show The Community The Best Way To Give Thanks....Through Service!

On Saturday, November 21 four scouts from Troop 355 installed a new bench on Charlie's Trail (off of the Mt. Wilson Trail) to replace one lost in the Eaton Fire. From left to right, the individuals pictured are Dylan Burke, Aaron Orellana, Atticus Vincent, and Alan Orellana.

On Monday November 23 this mighty group of girl scouts from Troop 333 (below), spent the day working on Zoi Li's Eagle Scout project. They cleaned up Goldberg Park on Sunnyside in Sierra Madre. The group rebuilt the book box and added a new toybox for all the toys that get left in the sandbox. They also cleaned up the vegetation and got everything hauled away. On Giving Tuesday December 1, 2026 we ask for your support to continue these efforts into 2027. All donations to our non-profit organization are tax deductible. Please tell your friends and family why you believe in our work and encourage them to support us too!

WALKING SIERRA MADRE: The Social Side by Deanne Davis

"Gratitude turns what we have into enough, and more."
"If the only prayer you ever said in your entire life was 'thank you,' it would be enough."

"Gratitude makes sense of our past, brings peace for today, and creates a vision for tomorrow."

We've done it again, friends and neighbors, celebrated another Thanksgiving. One of the things we celebrated is how much wonderful food can be had by bringing home goodies other people have prepared and heating them up in the microwave.

Gone are the days when I would buy a 30 lb. turkey, brine it for a couple of days and then roast it in a slow oven overnight. Memories of those incredibly moist, delicious, succulent turkeys linger in my memory and I thank our gracious Lord that I don't need to do that anymore. This year we had delicious hickory smoked turkey and awesome honey cured ham slices, lovingly cut and wrapped by the charming folks behind the deli counter at our local grocery store.

"I can't cook a Thanksgiving dinner. All I can make is cold cereal, maybe toast."
Charlie Brown, A Charlie Brown Thanksgiving

I can cook way more than cold cereal and toast, and did so for scores of family and friends for years and years. Our one major rule for Thanksgiving was there was no TV on during dinner, we didn't care what football game was on. Days of hard labor had been expended and everyone was going to appreciate dinner! Doggone it! And they did. And really didn't seem to miss the TV being on. In fact, many people lingered at the table enjoying conversation for what seemed like hours when all we really wanted to do was get the dishes washed and go to bed.

We had fabulous mashed potatoes with sour cream and chives, sweet potatoes, macaroni and cheese, creamed spinach, and cranberry sauce. All prepared by someone else and waiting for us in the deli case in microwaveable containers. We got some really good rye and sourdough bread and everyone could help themselves from the buffet we put out on the kitchen island and then enjoy their meal with the boring adults or elsewhere. We also treated ourselves to some absolutely delicious eggnog.

I did make Helen's Lime Jell-O Salad and it was just as delicious as ever. I also took the leftover cranberry sauce and made those cranberry sauce muffins included in last week's Mountain Views News. They really are great.

Everybody has some sort of Jell-O salad with their Thanksgiving dinner and I've passed mine along several times in years past. This was given to me more than fifty years ago by my Aunt Helen, who was the gift and jewelry buyer for long-departed I. Magnin's Department Store on Lake in Pasadena. She had the distinction of being a person who never said anything unpleasant about anyone, unlike Teddy Roosevelt's daughter, Alice Roosevelt Longworth who famously said, "If you haven't got anything nice to say about anybody, come sit here next to me!" Actually, you might enjoy this with your Christmas dinner…

HELEN'S GREEN JELL-O SALAD

Regular size package lime Jell-O
2 cups boiling water
24 oz. can crushed pineapple
1 Tbs. lemon juice
2 cups miniature marshmallows
1 8-oz container whipping cream, whipped till it's nice and thick, or the equivalent amount of Cool Whip

Put the Jell-O into whatever dish you plan to serve it in. Drain the pineapple juice into the Jell-O but not the pineapple, add the marshmallows, the 2 cups boiling water, the lemon juice and stir until the Jell-O is completely melted. Refrigerate. Keep a close eye on it as you don't want it to jell completely, just till it's starting to get firm. At that point, add the other ingredients, mix well to be sure all the Jell-O is off the bottom and mixed in. Refrigerate until totally firm. You can add nuts, walnuts or pecans, but only if you're sure that everyone who is going to eat this likes nuts. Otherwise, you have to clench your teeth while the non-nut eaters carefully pick each and every nut out and set them on another plate. You can double this with complete impunity and great success.

Enjoy your leftovers this week and try to walk a little more to make up for all your Thanksgiving goodies. And we didn't even mention pie!!

"When I started counting my blessings, my whole life turned around. We often take for granted the very things that most deserve our gratitude." Willie Nelson

FORMER SIERRA MADRE MAYOR PENS NEW BOOK:

THE PHILOSOPHY OF STAYING ON THE MATS FOR LIFE

by Glenn E. Lambdin

Every grappler over fifty knows the moment: the shoulder that won't cooperate, the knee with opinions, the twenty-four-year-old sprinting at you like it's the Olympics. Most people quit right there. Glenn Lambdin, a 70-year-old black belt who started jiu-jitsu at 53 and fought his way back to the mats after advanced stage-three cancer, wrote this book for the ones who refuse to quit.

This is not a technique manual. It's something rarer: an honest, warm, and frequently hilarious philosophy of longevity. Across forty short chapters, Lambdin tackles what no one else teaches. How do you tap early without wounding your pride? How do you roll with partners half your age and walk out in one piece? What does recovery really look like at 60? When is two classes a week plenty? What remains when raw strength fades?

His answers are practical, candid, and refreshingly free of false cheer. He admits what aging takes, then makes a convincing case for what it gives back: patience, composure, and what he calls "old age and treachery." Between the laughs, there are real moments of grace, including his reflections on the last belt and the last roll.

Whether you're a fifty-year-old white belt getting trashed by some young buck or a seasoned black belt adapting your game, you'll recognize yourself in these pages. You'll also come away with a plan for staying on the mats for decades, not months, and hopefully, for life.

Funny, wise, and deeply human, this book is a training partner in print. Grab a copy, then go find another class Because Youth and skill are no match against old age and treachery. (Makes a great Christmas Present!)

City Urges Travelers to Get Measles Vaccine

The Pasadena Public Health Department (PPHD) is urging all individuals, especially travelers, who are not vaccinated or are not fully vaccinated against measles to receive the measles, mumps, and rubella (MMR) vaccine to protect themselves, their families, and the community. As of now, there are no confirmed reports of measles cases in Pasadena in.

"As Pasadena residents prepare for holiday travel, I want to emphasize the importance of MMR vaccination for those who are traveling internationally or to domestic areas that are experiencing measles transmission," said Director of Public Health, Manuel Carmona.

"The MMR vaccine is the best protection against measles," said Health Officer, Dr. Parveen Kaur. "I strongly encourage anyone who is not fully vaccinated to consult with their healthcare provider and receive the recommended doses, ideally at least two weeks before traveling."

Measles is a highly contagious, serious airborne disease caused by a virus that spreads easily when an infected person breathes, coughs, or sneezes. The virus can remain in the air for up to two hours after an infected person has left an area. Measles symptoms appear 7 to 14 days after contact with the virus, and common symptoms include:

-High fever, which can exceed 104°F
-Cough
-Runny nose
- Red, watery eyes
- A rash that usually begins on the face and spreads to the rest of the body

On November 17, the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO), the international public health agency for the Americas, announced that the United States had lost its measles elimination status. This determination means the measles virus has circulated domestically for more than 12 months, which indicates endemic measles transmission has been reestablished in the country.

The resurgence of domestic measles cases highlights the importance of maintaining high vaccination rates, particularly in communities where vaccination coverage has declined. For more information about measles risks in specific countries, visit the CDC's Travelers' Health website.

South Pasadena to Hold State of the City

South Pasadena will host its annual State of the City on Wednesday December 2 in the Amedee O. "Dick" Richards, Jr., Council Chambers. The event will be held during the regular City Council Meeting, which is scheduled to begin at 7:00 p.m.

Mayor Sheila Rossi is set to share progress and achievements during the last year in South Pasadena, in addition to plans and objectives for the city's future. A brief reception will take place after the presentation, where food and refreshments will be provided.

State of the City is open to the public, but residents who cannot attend in-person are encouraged to watch live on the city's website, link below. City Council Meetings are recorded and available for six months online.

The City of South Pasadena is situated only six miles from downtown Los Angeles. Called the City of Trees, the area is known for its stunning homes, unique small businesses, and top-quality schools. South Pasadena's diverse population of about 25,000 occupies a mere 3.44 square miles of flatlands and hillsides on the west side of the San Gabriel Valley. This small-town atmosphere makes South Pasadena one of California's most desirable locations.

The South Pasadena Council Chambers is located at 1424 Mission Street.

Documentaries Screening at Pasadena Senior Center

Pasadena Senior Center is set to present a special viewing of two documentaries on Dec. 6, that explore Mexican American artists Alfredo de Batuc and Eloy Torrez, whose lives and creative journeys are deeply connected to Los Angeles and its Chicano cultural history. Lejanías y Nostalgia: The Art of Alfredo de Batuc and Eloy Take Two will be presented by filmmaker Roberto S. Oregel live onsite at the Pasadena Senior Center on from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m.

The personal stories and creative vision of artists Alfredo de Batuc (b. 1950) and Eloy Torrez (b. 1954). have been captured by filmmaker Robert S. Oregel, who also serves an Associate Professor at Cal State University, San Bernardino. Join the filmmaker and the artists (schedule permitting) after the screening for a discussion of these two films and their compelling subjects.

The event is only $5 for Pasadena Senior Center members and $10 for nonmembers, and reservations are suggested. To register or for more information, visit pasadenaseniorcenter.org, then click on Activities & Events, then Special Events.

Lejanías y Nostalgia (43 minutes) traces Alfredo de Batuc's journey from his native Sonora, Mexico, to Los Angeles, exploring themes of migration, identity, memory, resilience, cultural heritage and the enduring need to create. The film also chronicles de Batuc's recovery from Guillain-Barré Syndrome, which left him temporarily paralyzed and unable to paint for years, and his eventual return to his art. de Batuc's work has been described as "very poetic, very imaginative, drawing from the unconscious."

Eloy Take Two (30 minutes) is an intimate portrait of acclaimed Los Angeles painter and muralist Eloy Torrez, perhaps best known for his monumental "Pope of Broadway" mural in downtown Los Angeles depicting actor Anthony Quinn. The documentary offers audiences a personal look at Torrez, his artwork, creative process, and the experiences that have shaped his career.

Director Roberto S. Oregel's films explore art, social justice and human relationships. Credits include Gronk's Tormenta, Eloy Take Two, Casa Libre, and Lejanías y Nostalgia. His work has screened at festivals, museums and galleries; Downtown L.A. premiered at REDCAT, and Dominance and Terror: A Discussion with Noam Chomsky aired nationally on Showtime.

Feminisms of Julia Morgan

Join Pasadena Heritage, December 10, as the present a talk on The Feminisms of Julia Morgan. Doors open at 6 p.m., with the lecture beginning promptly at 6:15 p.m.

Parisian newspapers described Julia Morgan as a feminist when she broke down the barriers of entry to the architecture program of the Ecole des Beaux-Arts in 1898. Whether she liked it or not, that sheroic act set the bar for the legacy of California native's life and career. It begs the question: what did feminism mean to Julia Morgan? Just as no two Morgan designs are alike, no single definition answers the question. Join historian and Morgan scholar Karen McNeill as she explores the pioneering architect's actions, buildings, and clients to understand variations of feminism during the Progressive Era. We'll travel all around the state, spending some extra time in Pasadena and Southern California.

Karen McNeill, Ph.D., is an expert of Julia Morgan's life, work, and legacy. Her award-winning scholarship scholarship focuses on women and gender in the architectural profession as well as how Progressive Era women used the built environment to expand their roles in society as consumers, reformers, educators, and professionals. Dr. McNeill's latest publications on Morgan can be found in Julia Morgan: The Road to San Simeon (Rizzoli/Electa) and Oxford Bibliographies.

An American Sign Language (ASL) interpreter will be present during the program. The lecture will also be recorded in ASL and made available following the event. Pasadena Heritage is located 160 North Oakland Avenue.

Stargazing Lecture Series: The Search for Planet Nine

Join Caltech astronomers Mike Brown (pictured), Richard and Barbara Rosenberg Professor of Planetary Astronomy, for a special evening Friday at the Beckman Auditorium to celebrate 10 years of Caltech's Stargazing Lecture Series. The event runs from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Free admission but advance tickets are required. For tickets visit: events.caltech.edu.

To celebrate this milestone, Caltech astronomer Mike Brown, known for his role in the reclassification of Pluto, will present a special public lecture exploring the ongoing search for Planet Nine. Following the lecture, Brown will join a panel of Caltech astronomers for an extended audience Q&A, while volunteers provide guided stargazing through telescopes outside Beckman Auditorium.

Stargazing is dependent on clear weather, but the indoor lecture and Q&A will take place regardless of weather conditions.

One decade ago Caltech astronomers proposed the existence of a massive unseen giant planet in the far reaches of our solar system. If real, this planet would be something like eight times more massive than the Earth and 15 times more distant than Neptune. It would be the fifth largest planet of our solar system. Because it is so distant and faint w Caltech astronomers have not found it yet, but this year marks the start of a massive new survey that will provide the definitive evidence for the existence of Planet Nine. Caltech astronomers are currently analyzing data nightly. I'll talk about why we think this planet is real and how we will prove it within the next year. Or prove that it doesn't exist at all.

Beckman Auditorium is located 332 S Michigan Ave. For directions, weather updates, and more information, visit: outreach.astro.caltech.edu.

SANTA ANITA SEES 16TH RACEHORSE DEATH IN 2026

ARCADIA (CNS) - A 2-year-old thoroughbred colt has died from a training injury at Santa Anita Park, the 16th horse to die from a racing or training injury at the Arcadia track this year.

El Magico Gonzalez died Monday, according to the California Horse Racing Board, which lists the death in the ``musculoskeletal'' category. ``El Magico Gonzalez sustained an injury during routine training Monday morning,'' Amy Zimmerman, Santa Anita's senior vice president and executive producer, told City News Service on Tuesday.

``The horse was immediately attended to by an expert team of on-site veterinarians and transported via equine ambulance to the on-site equine hospital for further examination and advanced diagnostics. Sadly, given the nature of the injury, surgical repair was not an option, and the veterinary team recommended humane euthanasia after a thorough evaluation. His rider was not injured.

``As is protocol, the horse will undergo a necropsy overseen by the University of California (Davis) School of Veterinary Medicine and the findings • reported to the California Horse Racing Board,'' Zimmerman added.

The horse had yet to compete in an official race, according to the industry website Equibase. His last official workout was on the dirt track at Santa Anita on Nov. 8. Santa Anita had 12 racing and training deaths in 2025, 14 in 2024, 17 in 2023, 12 in 2022, 19 in 2021 and 16 in 2020. Those numbers were a substantial improvement over 2019, when 42 such deaths at the Arcadia track sparked widespread debate about safety issues in the sport and even drew the attention of state lawmakers.

The deaths prompted several changes, including drug reforms, increased veterinary oversight and improvements to racing surfaces.

Zimmerman has touted the track's 99.985% safety rate, which she calls ``unrivaled among tracks with similar racing and training dates.''

Santa Anita is on a break following the conclusion of its autumn meet on Nov. 1, with racing set to resume on Dec. 26. City News Service, Inc.

ON THANKSGIVING

I hope you had a wonderful Thanksgiving Day. I shared a light meal with friends where we also practiced some archery and learned a little about the history of the day. Last week, at the class that I conducted, our group created a semi-wild meal from cactus and eggs, acorn pancakes, nettle soup, sage tea, and a salad composed of lamb's quarters, nasturtium, sow thistle, and other wild greens. It was our attempt to recreate a West Coast Thanksgiving meal.

FOLLOWUP
I met a man who began to discuss with me the column I wrote for this paper two weesk ago, about the historical origins of Thanksgiving, and what happened, and what didn't happen.

"I was a little puzzled after I read it," Steve told me. "I wanted to know more. I understand that the first historical Thanksgiving may have not happened the way we are told as children," he told me, "but how did we get to where we are today? What I understood from your column was that there are historical roots, and that we today remember those roots and try to be very thankful, but the connection was unclear." Steve and I then had a very long conversation.

A newspaper column is typically not long enough to provide the "big picture" of the entire foundation of such a commemoration, as well as all the twists and turns that have occurred along the way. But here is the condensed version of what I told my friend Steve.

First, try reading any of the many books that are available that describe the first so-called "first Thanksgiving" at the Plymouth colony that at least attempts to also show the Indigenous perspective. You will quickly see that this was not simply the European pilgrims and the native people sitting down to a great meal and giving thanks to their respective Gods, though that probably did occur. In fact, the indigenous peoples and the newcomers had thanksgiving days on a pretty regular basis.

As you take the time to explore the motives of the many key players of our so-called "first Thanksgiving," in the context of that time, you will see that though the Europeans were now increasingly flowing into the eastern seaboard, their long-term presence had not been allowed – until this point. Massasoit was the political-military leader of the Wampanoag confederation, which was the stronger native group in the area. However, after disease had wiped out many of the native people, Massasoit was worried about the neighboring long-time enemies – the Narragansett -- to the west. The gathering of the European leaders of the Plimouth Colony and Massasoit and entourage had been more-or-less brokered by Tisquantum (aka Squanto) who spoke English.

Yes, there had been much interaction between the new colonists and native people for some time, and this gathering of 3 days in 1621 was intended to seal the deal between the colonists aligning with Massasoit. The exact date is unknown, but it was sometime between September 21 and November 9.

Yes, historians say that a grand meal followed, including mostly meat. The colony remained and there was relative peace for the next 10 to 50 years, depending on which historians were correct in their reading of the meager notes. The historical record indicates that the new colonists learned how to hunt, forage, practice medicine, make canoes and moccasins, and much more, from the indigenous people. Even Tisquantum taught the colonists how to farm using fish scraps, ironically, a bit of farming detail he picked up during his few years in Europe.

Politicians and religious leaders continued to practice the giving of thanks, in their churches and in their communities, and that is a good thing. They would hearken back to what gradually became known as the "first Thanksgiving" in order to give thanks for all the bounty they found and created in this new world, always giving thanks to God! But clearly, the indigenous people would have a very different view of the consequences of this 1621 pact, which gradually and inevitably meant the loss of their lands and further decimation of their peoples from disease. Of course, there was not yet a "United States of America," and it was with a bit of nostalgia and selective memory that we refer to this semi-obscure gathering of two peoples as some sort of foundational event in the development of the United States. And it is understandable from the perspective of a national mythology that the native people were forgotten and the "gifts from God" remembered.

My friend Steve was nodding his head, beginning to see that there was much under the surface of this holiday. I recommended that he read such books as "1491: New Revelations of the Americas Before Columbus" by Mann, "Native American History: Idiot's Guide" by Fleming, and others.

As I still believe, giving thanks is a good thing – good for the soul and good for the society. Just be sure to always give thanks where it is due!

Eventually, in the centuries that followed, Thanksgiving was celebrated on various days in various places. George Washington declared it an official Thanksgiving in 1789. However, the day did not become standardized as the final Thursday each November until 1863 with a proclamation by Abraham Lincoln.

The gross commercialization of Thanksgiving is a somewhat recent manifestation of the way in which we have tried to extract money from just about anything. One way to break that cycle is to just choose to do something different.

AFTER THANKSGIVING BLUES: FINDING JOY IN THE DAYS AHEAD

When Thanksgiving is over, the decorations come down, family members return home, and the house suddenly becomes quiet again. For many older adults, this change can bring on what is often called the "After Thanksgiving Blues."

The holiday may have provided an opportunity to see children, grandchildren, and friends. When everyone leaves, seniors who live alone or have limited social contact may experience feelings of loneliness, sadness, or isolation. These feelings are especially common when the excitement of the holidays gives way to an ordinary daily routine.

The good news is that there are simple ways to keep those post-holiday feelings from taking over. First, stay connected. Don't wait until the next holiday to speak with family and friends. Schedule regular phone calls, video chats, or visits. Even a short conversation can brighten someone's day.

Second, get out of the house. Consider joining a senior center, attending a community event, visiting the library, or meeting a friend for lunch. Staying socially active can make a meaningful difference in emotional well-being.

Third, create something to look forward to. It might be a weekly outing, a favorite hobby, a movie, or planning a small gathering with friends. Having something on the calendar gives each week a little excitement.

Family members should also remember that the holidays can be an emotional time for aging parents. A simple phone call or unexpected visit after Thanksgiving can mean just as much as the holiday celebration itself.

If sadness persists, becomes overwhelming, or interferes with everyday life, speaking with a healthcare professional can help.

Remember, the holidays may last only a day, but caring, friendship, and meaningful connections should continue throughout the year. Every senior deserves to feel remembered, included, and valued—not just on Thanksgiving, but every day.

OUT TO PASTOR

A Weekly Religion Column by Rev. James Snyder

MAY THE GOBBLE-GOBBLE BE WITH YOU

Holidays are the most wonderful times of the year. It doesn't matter which holiday it is; celebrating it is what's really important. And I'm all for celebrating holidays.

I've often been asked, "What is your favorite holiday?" To which I always respond with a smile, "The one I'm celebrating at the time."

Keeping up with holidays is not part of my persona. I accept the holiday right in front of me and enjoy it without thinking about the next one. The Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage, however, has a very different persona. I'm not sure, but I think she has all our holidays planned at least a year in advance.

Along with holidays are the birthdays of all our family members. She knows every one of their birthdays, and even knows the exact time they were born. How she knows that I don't know, and because I love life so much, I'm not going to ask her. Going along is so much easier.

At the beginning of summer, The Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage begins shopping for the fall holiday celebrations. She is the Queen of BOGO, and I can't remember the last time she paid full price for anything in the grocery store. She knows when things are on sale, and the grocery store employees know her and tell her what bargain is coming up.

She can sometimes save more money than she spends, and I do appreciate that. It would be nice to pocket the money she saves, but that's for another life.

When it comes to holiday celebrations, I am really fixated on the holiday meals. There was a time when The Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage did all the cooking. Now, the daughters and even granddaughters pitch in. We have a large and talented cooking crew for these holidays. They have been well trained.

The other morning I was sitting in my lazy chair drinking some coffee when I smelled something I couldn't identify. It smelled familiar, but I couldn't remember where I'd smelled it before. I was hoping the house wasn't on fire. Finally, I got up, went into the kitchen, and asked, "What is that smell?" "Oh, you silly boy," she said. "Don't you remember? I'm roasting turkey for our Thanksgiving dinner."

Then it came to me. I remember that smell now, and it was the wonderful aroma of a turkey roasting in the oven. How I could forget that smell is beyond my understanding. It's one of the most wonderful smells of the year.

This year she bought a 21-pound turkey for half price. It sure was big, and she had to have the grandson come and put it in the oven because it was heavier than she could lift. And I can't lift anything that heavy either. If it's a book, I can lift it, but if it's a 21-pound turkey, it is beyond my ability.

I'm not too sure, but I believe it takes around eight hours to roast that turkey in the oven. Those are the most wonderful eight hours I can experience. Each hour the aroma gets richer, and I enjoy it all the more.

As I enjoyed this aroma, I anticipated sitting down at the table and gobbling away that turkey. I couldn't get it out of my mind. Not only that, but a week after we eat that roast turkey, I still can taste it. That taste is so wonderful that it stays with me for at least a week, maybe even two. I wouldn't care if it went two weeks longer. As I sit enjoying that lingering taste of roast turkey, I can remember every bite.

One of the great things about The Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage's roast turkey is that it tastes better, if you can believe it, the next day as leftovers. And even days later, that taste lingers on my lips.

Several days after Thanksgiving, we were driving downtown for a doctor's visit. The Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage drove her Sissy Van while I sat in the passenger seat. As we were going, I began smacking my lips over and over. Finally, she looked at me and said, "What's wrong?"

I stopped for a moment, not realizing what I was doing, and as I thought about it, it finally came to mind. So I told her, "I'm remembering that roast turkey that you made for Thanksgiving. I just can't get it off of my lips." Both of us laughed together.

Wherever I go, I take that turkey aroma with me. Of all the things that I love eating, I love nothing more than her roast turkey. It stays with me for weeks. And then, it is Christmas time and another roast turkey adventure. This adventure seeps into the New Year, and there is no better way to start the New Year than enjoying the amazing aroma of roast turkey.

Thinking about this reminded me of what the Apostle Paul said. "For we are to God the pleasing aroma of Christ among those who are being saved and those who are perishing. To the one we are an aroma that brings death; to the other, an aroma that brings life. And who is equal to such a task?" (2 Corinthians 2:15-16)

Imagining that my relationship with Christ is used by God as an aroma to those around me is challenging, to say the least. Every day is a challenge for me.

FLU SEASON ARRIVED EARLY AND THANKSGIVING COULD SPEED IT UP

Seven states already report high flu activity, and the virus has been tied to an estimated 2,100 deaths so far this season

By: Ellyn Vohnoutka, MSHC, BSN, RN

Flu season has arrived early in the United States, and it's gaining speed fast.

Seven states reported high or very high flu activity in the week ending Nov. 7, up from two the week before. The figures come from the latest weekly flu report from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

The increase started in the South and West. California, Louisiana, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Washington are the hardest hit so far, with Louisiana faring the worst, The Associated Press reports.

Flu activity is running higher than is typical this early in the fall, the CDC said. Still, an early start doesn't portend a worse season overall.

Flu season "is taking off and it's taking off in a direction that's only likely to increase in the next month or two," Dr. Fred Lopez, an infectious diseases specialist at LSU Health Sciences Center in New Orleans, told AP News.

Louisiana is often one of the first states to see flu climb each year, Lopez said. He pointed to high poverty, low vaccination rates and trouble getting healthcare as part of the reason. Since the current season began Oct. 1, flu has caused at least 2.6 million illnesses, 36,000 hospitalizations and 2,100 deaths. Those are CDC estimates through Nov. 7.

Five children have died from flu this season, including two deaths reported in the past week. Child deaths are often reported weeks after they happen, so that count may rise. Adults 65 and older are being hospitalized at the highest rates, followed by children younger than 5.

Nearly all cases this fall stem from a type of influenza A known as H1N1. The strain has picked up mutations that could help it dodge the body's immune defenses, AP News reports.

Even so, early lab testing shows this year's vaccine still recognizes the virus that's going around, the CDC said. It's too soon to know how well the shot will work this season.

CDC forecasts suggest flu hospitalizations and emergency room visits will likely keep climbing nationwide through late November. Doctors say they expect Thanksgiving travel and get-togethers to help the virus spread.

"If you haven't been vaccinated, you should get vaccinated now," Lopez told AP News. People who are quite sick should wait until they recover, he added. But those who've already had flu this fall should still get a shot, since the vaccine guards against three strains and more than one often circulates.

The CDC recommends a flu shot for everyone 6 months and older.

Last winter's flu season peaked in late December and hit some parts of the country especially hard. The CDC estimated it caused at least 24,000 deaths. A total of 203 children died from flu that season.

AT MIKE'S RED TACOS, IT'S NOT DEL TACO

A little Pasadena trivia before lunch. What do Baja Fresh, Bob's Big Boy and Real Food Daily have in common? I'll give you a hint. You could have pulled into the same parking lot for all three. I count four restaurants at that address before the current one. If you remember the fourth, drop me a line.

I brought my buddy Tony from the gym along for lunch. He knew I was paying. How do I know? He was already standing out front when I drove in.

The answer to the trivia question is 899 East Del Mar Boulevard, right at South Lake Avenue. I still give directions around Pasadena by telling people what used to be there. At this corner, I have to know how old you are before I decide which restaurant to mention. These days it's Mike's Red Tacos, the first Los Angeles-area location for a fellow named Mike Touma who got his start with a food truck in San Diego.

Full disclosure. We cheated a little on this first visit. Peyton, the director of marketing, came in and showed us around. Sorry, no LeBron. He's an investor. I liked that they'd paid homage to Pasadena. When you move into a corner people have known for years, it's nice to show them you know where you are.

If you like Del Taco, this place might not be for you. I ought to qualify that. If what you like about Del Taco is that you know exactly what you're getting before you turn into the drive-through, your first bite here may throw you. I ordered Mike's Meal, two beef birria tacos and house-made chips. The tortillas are dipped in chile oil and crisped on the griddle. There's some give to them, but they're firm enough to hold a generous load of beef. And there's a cup of consommé on the tray, so you can decide how much crunch you want to trade for a good dip.

We had chips and guacamole, of course, and the guacamole tasted very fresh. Tony and I both picked Jamaica, the tart, deep-red hibiscus agua fresca. Mango, horchata and tamarindo were lined up beside it. I usually make up my mind about the drink in about two seconds. Here I had to think about it.

Now, ramen at a Mexican joint? Yes. Once you've dipped a taco into that birria consommé, you can see how somebody looked at the cup and thought it deserved a bigger bowl. At Mike's, it comes with noodles, beef, cilantro and onions. I'd go back for the ramen all by itself. I know what it says out front. I also know what I'm ordering.

I thought the prices were very fair, especially with that much beef in the tacos. They're still new on Del Mar. Will the prices hold? Time will tell.

Four out of five stars on my first visit. Why four? Five takes another lunch. I'll go back unannounced, order the ramen and see how it comes out on an ordinary afternoon. My longer-term concern is what happens when a food-truck idea becomes a big chain. They already have several locations, yes, but there's a difference between opening more restaurants and making every decision for a hundred of them. I hope they keep putting that much beef in the tacos and making the guacamole as fresh as it was at our table. That's the lunch I want to come back for.

Quibble. This week it belongs to Tony. The chips are house-made, and he thinks they ought to serve them warm. With guacamole that fresh, I think he has a point. And if a man can get to lunch before the fellow who's paying, I suppose he's earned a say in how the chips come out.

How many of the following activities have you tried? Some may be familiar, while others might be completely new to you. And you may be surprised to discover that many of them can provide a good workout without ever feeling like exercise. Perfect for this time of year.

Holidays also bring opportunities to spend time with friends and relatives we don't see very often. Instead of spending those visits sitting around, why not turn them into fun, active adventures?

One of the best things about recreational activities is that they're often new, different, and something we don't do frequently. That makes them exciting. And when we're enjoying ourselves, we're less likely to notice how much physical effort we're putting into an activity.

Some ideas to get you started:

☐ Go on a treasure hunt. Have you ever tried geocaching? This outdoor treasure-hunting activity uses a smartphone or GPS device to locate hidden containers. Some are easy to find, while others require searching and problem-solving. You may find yourself walking much farther than planned because you're determined to discover the next treasure. It's especially entertaining with children or grandchildren.

☐ Explore tide pools. Southern California's coastline offers opportunities to discover fascinating marine life during low tide. Searching for sea stars, anemones, and crabs involves walking, carefully stepping over uneven surfaces, bending, and squatting. These movements challenge balance, coordination, and leg strength. Check tide schedules beforehand and avoid slippery rocks and dangerous surf.

☐ Discover a new park, garden, or preserve. Southern California has an abundance of beautiful parks, botanical gardens, wildlife preserves, and natural areas, many of which we've never visited despite living nearby for years. Choose one you've never explored before and make a day of it. It's a great way to make an ordinary walk feel like an adventure. Some locations also offer hills and uneven terrain that provide additional physical challenges.

☐ Try disc golf. Similar to traditional golf, players throw flying discs toward specially designed baskets. Courses are often located in public parks and may be free to use. Walking between baskets provides aerobic activity, while throwing and retrieving discs involve coordination, flexibility, and muscular control. It's something people of different ages can enjoy together.

☐ Go birdwatching. Winter is an excellent time to observe migratory birds visiting Southern California. Wetlands, lakes, and nature preserves provide opportunities to see species that aren't necessarily around throughout the year. Bring binoculars or use a bird identification app. Searching for different birds encourages walking and exploring while keeping your mind actively engaged.

☐ Fly a kite. When was the last time you flew a kite? Beaches and open parks provide wonderful opportunities on breezy days. Launching a kite may involve walking or jogging, while controlling it requires arm movements, coordination, and constant adjustments in body position. It's a simple activity that can bring out the kid in just about anyone.

☐ Visit an orchard or farm. Depending on the season, Southern California farms offer opportunities for fruit picking, walking through orchards, and exploring agricultural areas. Reaching for fruit, carrying baskets, and walking over natural terrain provide functional movement.

☐ Take a beachcombing adventure. Instead of simply walking along the beach, search for unusual shells, driftwood, interesting stones, or other natural treasures. Walking on sand requires more effort from the muscles of the feet, ankles, and legs than walking on a firm surface.

☐ Try a holiday scavenger hunt. Choose a decorated neighborhood or outdoor shopping district and create a list of things everyone must find. Perhaps it's a giant snowman, an unusual wreath, or a house covered in colorful lights. Searching for each item turns an ordinary walk into an entertaining adventure.

What makes these activities particularly beneficial is the variety of movements they involve. Unlike repetitive exercise routines, recreational adventures may require us to change direction, adjust our balance, bend, reach, and walk on different surfaces. These activities also provide mental stimulation through learning, problem-solving, and discovering unfamiliar surroundings.

Of course, not every recreational activity provides the same benefits as a structured workout. The intensity and duration of movement still matter. But these fun times can supplement regular exercise while reducing the amount of time we spend sitting.

This holiday season, instead of planning another gathering where everyone spends hours sitting around, suggest doing something different. It's a chance to create memories that last long after the holidays are over. And everyone may get a workout without even knowing it!

UNLOCK YOUR LIFE

MAKE THE SHIFT: THE POWER OF AND

Let me remind you of a little symbol on your computer keyboard that might change how you approach your life. It's right above the number seven. But to get to it, you have to make a shift.

I must confess that despite all the remarkable things my computer can do, I still use it largely as a glorified typewriter. I know it has capabilities I haven't discovered yet. Maybe the same is true of us.

Like our computers, we have an operating system working in the background. We call these our paradigms, our habitual ways of thinking and being in the world. They help us navigate life efficiently, but sometimes they limit what we perceive as possible. One such habit is our tendency to think in either/or terms.

Recently, during a coaching session, a client expressed a desire for adventure. She had concluded that answering her call to adventure would require her to quit her job. Since quitting her job wasn't an option, neither was adventure. I invited her to consider what adventure might look like if she kept her job. What would it feel like? What possibilities had she yet to consider?

Have you ever searched for something you were absolutely convinced was in a particular spot? You keep looking in the same place, certain that's where you left it. Then you move to another part of the room, look from a different angle, and there it is! The object hasn't moved. You have.

Take a look at your keyboard. Just above the number seven is a symbol called an ampersand (&). To access it, you press the Shift key. To get to AND, we have to make a shift. Notice how life resists being categorized as entirely good or entirely bad.

A relationship may end, and we can still treasure the good times we shared. What we learn about someone later need not erase every beautiful experience we had together. And there are circumstances in this life over which we have absolutely no control.

I think of the parents I've known who have experienced the tremendous pain of losing a child. Knowing what they know now, knowing the depth of the sorrow they would eventually experience, I have yet to meet one who would choose never to have known the love of that child. They would still choose the love. That is not to suggest that there is anything good about losing a child. It acknowledges that something profoundly beautiful and something profoundly painful can be part of the very same life. One need not cancel out the other.

Every single day, I experience pain in my leg. And every day, I am grateful to be alive. I am grateful that I can walk. There are times when I think, God, I wish I hadn't fallen off that ladder. But it happened. And here I am. I am proud of the work I've done to regain my ability to walk. I rebuilt this leg through my effort and my willingness to face what lay ahead. I don't know how long I will experience pain. I may very well experience pain for the rest of my life. And I'm still going to live it.

I can wish something had never happened AND be grateful to have the life I'm living today.

Honestly, sometimes I'm not ready to make the shift. I'm still making my way through an experience, and I haven't finished processing it. In those times, I say to myself: I'm willing to be willing to be willing. I'm willing to entertain the possibility that someday I might see this differently. I'm not there yet, and I don't have to pretend that I am. I don't have to know when that day will come. I don't even have to know what that different perspective might be. For today, willingness is enough.

People sometimes enter coaching believing they must make some monumental change in their lives. While living a vision-driven life invites us to look toward the future, I consider a coaching relationship successful when my clients also recognize the joy available to them in their everyday lives.

I don't want us to become so occupied with creating a future life we love that we forget to love the life we're living. We are wonderfully complicated beings. We can be grieving AND experience humor. We can be disappointed AND grateful.

We can be doing something we would prefer not to be doing AND discover something delightful in the experience. This season can be fraught with painful expectations about what our lives should look like, who should be sitting at our tables, and how we ought to feel.

But joy need not betray our grief. And grief need not disqualify us from experiencing joy. Let's resist the temptation to spend our lives chasing a carrot dangling just beyond our reach, continually postponing our enjoyment of life until we arrive somewhere else. You don't have to love everything that happens to you to love your life.

And this moment right here has never been lived before and will never be seen again. What beauty is available to you in it? What might you enjoy? The next time you find yourself thinking in terms of either/or, I invite you to entertain the AND.

And if you're not quite ready, perhaps you can be willing to be willing to be willing. Make a little shift. And remember you're in this beautiful thing called life. It's happening now.

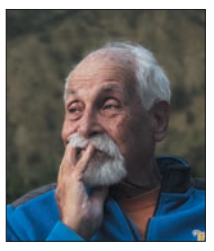
STUART TOLCHIN — PUT THE LIGHTS ON



HOORAY FOR THE PRESENT BUT I AM A CAPTIVE OF AND FEAR THE FUTURE

First, Hooray for November 28, the day that the local Mountain Views News which carries my weekly articles becomes available. November 28 is my favorite day of the year as it is the birthdate of my two wonderful children born two years apart. These wonderful people are now facing two very difficult challenges. My son has been confined to a hospital for two months and has only been recently transferred to a Nursing Facility wherein he is still unable get up from the bed and walk by himself. Nevertheless, he is improving and very importantly he is now able and willing to converse with my wife and I as we visit him every day. For me this makes a huge difference. Aaron has retained his wit and is now present and with the physical therapy provided at this new facility the present week is so much more tolerable than the past months. I am now able to feel hopeful about my son's future.

As for my daughter she too is facing very difficult challenges, though challenges of a different kind. First, I am so thankful for her devotion and care for her brother. She visits him almost daily, despite her other responsibilities and is consistently caring and nurturing. At the same time, she maintains her busy Immigration Law Practice and is an important advocate in her field. Simultaneously she is the caring mother of a 7-year-old daughter who she has brought into the life of my wife, and I and this little girl is just plain wonderful.

Of course, in the present I have my wonderful wife who cares for me and has taken responsibility to do almost everything. So far, our finances are okay, our house, despite its three flights of stairs is wonderful and the inspiring views of the canyon it provides are vitally important. I could continue mentioning the positive aspects.

As for my present life which includes the continuing availability to create weekly articles for the paper and to receive positive, sensitive replies. Sadly, several friends have passed away recently, and my own ageing brings continual difficulties. However, I must emphasize, that I feel very fortunate to still be around and with medical help I still hope to be around for a while to enjoy my friends and family and home.

Additionally, I should add that I am very gratified by the recent midterm election results but, nevertheless. I am very fearful about the future of this world. No, I am not just talking about the possible cancellation of the Major League Baseball Season which would deprive me of the satisfactory television viewing of the baseball season. Seriously, there are overwhelming destructive possibilities connected to the overwhelming capabilities of unrestrained technology and Artificial Intelligence. Is humanity to become a slave to its own machines? Is education, learning, and the enjoyment of books and the joy of writing all to be eliminated in the future?

The continuation of the acceptance of weaponry and gun usage, and the continuing threat of nuclear weapons in the possession of unstable governments is absolutely frightening. I hate the continuing presence of wars, which do not seem about to be eliminated, which unnecessarily cause the death of so many people, military or civilian. As I write, I realize that although I complain about my own life and the lives of those around me, they are ultimately more livable than the lives of earlier generations of my heritage.

The illness of my son has connected to continuing misery for me but much as it absorbs me it is still only one aspect of an overall pleasant life. When I compare my life to the life of my father hampered by blindness and deprived of family and education, I realize how lucky I have been. Overall, my own life has been fortunate, and I only wish that my granddaughter's life in the future will be as fortunate and that together with the regaining of health by my son is really enough for me to wish for. So, enough fear of the future and a continuing recognition of what is still positive in my own life. I only hope that I can do that and recommend that you do the same notwithstanding the self-affirming joys of complaining.

RICH JOHNSON — QUIRKS ABOUND

What is a quirk actually. Merriam-Webster tells us the word is a noun meaning an unusual habit, odd trait, or unexpected turn of events. What is a quirk exactly?

An odd habit or routine. Unusual physical trait or party tricks. It's fun to identify quirks and odd behavior of celebrities. Read this column and you may find a quirk you would like to adapt to your lifestyle routines.

I'll start with billionaire Mark Zuckerbert. The 4th or 5th richest man behind Elon Musk, Jeff Bezos, and a couple others. Mr. Zuckerberg pledged way back in 2011 to only eat meat from animals he killed himself. (If you ever spot him eating a "Big Mac" photograph him and expose him to Jimmy Kimmel.)

Speaking of billionaires: Bill Gates used to keep track of employee's license plate numbers in his head. Now that Microsoft has over 200,000 employees worldwide, I doubt he keeps track. I could be wrong.

Albert Einstein never wore socks. He blamed a big toe which drilled holes in is socks. (No, he didn't tell me which big toe). Charles Dickens always carried a comb and fixed his hair hundreds of time a day.

Note to law enforcement officers. Don't bother handcuffing Jane Fonda. She has at least one double-jointed wrist and can easily slip out of a pair of handcuffs.

Here's an admirable one. Lady Gaga was raised a traditionally minded Catholic and doesn't believe in Premarital sex.

I think I understand Jennifer Aniston's quirk regarding air travel. I mean, think about it. You are getting on a airplane, traveling 5 miles above the earth, traveling 500-600 miles per hour for most of the distance. So, to offset the risk, when Ms. Aniston steps onto a plane, she steps on with her right foot first and taps on the outside of the plane for good luck. Kit Harington touches the outside of the plane three times and carries his lucky childhood pen for luck.

Thomas Edison tested interviewees by offering them a bowl of soup. If they added salt before tasting it, he believed they made to many assumptions and wouldn't hire them.

Let me divert to well known people with extraordinary high IQ's. By the way, some people on this list may surprise you. (And no, I did not make the list. Just missed the cut). By the way, the average human's IQ would hover right around 100. (85-114 is where 67% of the world population falls) Over 115 you are above average or bright. 130 and above, you are gifted.

By the way, you may be surprised at some of the high intelligence people. I'll start with one slightly surprising. British actor Rowan Atkinson (known for his role as Mr. Bean) is said to have an IQ of around 178. P.S. He holds a master's degree in engineering from Oxford.

Actor James Woods is said to have an IQ between 180 and 184 (That would take two of me to equal)

Back to Lady Gaga. Her IQ logs in at 166. Sharon Stone about 156. Dolph Lundgren and Quentin Tarantino at 160. Matt Damon 150 or so. His buddy, Ben Affleck a smidge higher than Matt at 154. Natalie Portman logs in around 140.

Snoop Dog is at 147: Wowsers or in his case Bowsers!) Baseballer Reggie Jackson and actor Ashton Kutcher chime in at 160. Alicia Keyes 164. Conservative political figure Condoleeza Rice at an unbelievable 185 (No wonder she doesn't return my calls.)

I was tempted to recite a list of low IQ celebrities But, hey, if I published that list I would demonstrate which cellar my IQ was in.

There is so much more we could talk about. I don't want to take time away from you reading Stuart's column. So, I will humbly bid you adieu for now. And go check my iq.

HOWARD Hays As I See It

"Roses are red. Everything else is blue." – paulosincup on the midterm elections, posted on Threads

Hoping everyone's been enjoying a long Thanksgiving weekend. Now approaching the end of the month, here are some favorite posts from November:

Reacting to midterm election results, tetyanawrites posts: "Our pronouns are we/back". From imagidadnation: "Congress is so blue we might be able to eradicate measles again." And thehazelhayes: "I'm going out for my gay islamic reassignment abortion does anyone want anything?" lhk.kagtek declares: "WOKE 3 WE'RE TURNING THAT BALLROOM INTO A PLANNED PARENTHOOD".

sami posts: "Susan Collins' Reign of Concern is over." ianpattersonauthor adds: "Fetterman threatening to be a Republican is like Bob Ross threatening to paint a tree." jane1delaney observes: "It's weird how those migrant caravans only make it as far as Fox News." From mrtoddlevin: "Hard to believe POTUS posting AI videos of himself airdropping diarrhea on voters didn't help his party more during the midterms." And martinldart: "I've said some awful things about Trump, but I've gotta give credit where it's due. He did what no democrat has been able to do for decades, he turned Mississippi blue."

awaywithamber asks: "Can we have a redo of the America 250 party? Because now there's something to celebrate." covie_93 reflects on Elon Musk: "Who among us hasn't donated half a billion dollars in one election cycle to a political movement we don't support."

Then we had shutdowns of computer banking services, email and our entire air traffic system. But as thelesliegarr noted: "Things aren't so bad right now if you don't fly or use banks or eat." For ask_aubry, "It's like America's warranty has expired." mandy says: "I couldn't help but wonder if 2026 is the y2k they warned us about in 1999". And for Ephem3ra: "The entire United States is just riding around with the check engine light on."

As for a government response, comicref posts: "Looking forward to the president reassuring air travelers by showing off the progress of his ballroom." To a photo of Transportation Secretary Sean Duffy and DHS Secretary Markwayne Mullin at their joint press conference, pensacolapolitics adds the caption: "Relax everybody. A reality TV star and a plumber are in charge of this emergency situation." From ginnyhogan: "I feel like Sean Duffy would never have taken the transportation secretary job if he'd known it would require actual work". ronaldfilipkowski then reminds: "I mean, it took them 6 months to figure out how to clean a pool."

While these shutdowns were still in the headlines, the Nvidia / Chinese spy story broke. Then Trump was off to China for the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation Summit; upon arrival, making new headlines by greeting Vladimir Putin as "my friend". From JamieBonkiewicz: "MAGA spent years telling us Democrats hate America and now we're watching the guy you voted for call Vladimir Putin his (freaking) friend." From Don Winslow: "Man responsible for the invasion of Ukraine is 'My friend'. Man responsible for the Russian army raping and slaughtering women and children in Ukraine is 'My friend'. Man responsible for the Russian army kidnapping 20,000 Ukrainian children is 'My friend'." Added MeidasTouch: "He's a traitor. Not sure what else can be said. Shame on all those who have enabled him." And Michael Freeman: "I remember fondly when America was the good guys."

Returning from Asia, Trump took a question from Kaitlin Collins of CNN: "Russia, of course, is Iran's biggest ally. Do you believe Putin is a friend to America?" He began his reply, "I can't speak to America.", then went into the "Russia hoax". Tommy Vietor posted: "'I can't speak to America'??? You're the President of the United States. Your job is to speak for America!" From Greg Sargent of The New Republic: "Trump accidentally reveals here that he cares more about how Putin treated him during the 'Russia hoax' than he does about how Russia impacts our national interest." Sargent reminds parenthetically, "Also, the Russia scandal wasn't a hoax, it was 100% real".

Back at the White House to deal with myriad issues facing our country, Trump sends out 35 Truth Social posts extolling his kinship with Putin and China's Xi Jinping. Included is a pic of him almost embracing Putin, seemingly whispering sweet nothings into his ear – titled "My Friend".

From Sir Conor Burns: "It will take decades for the United States to recover from this stain." And Daniel Hannan: "He has debased his office and disgraced his country." Anne Applebaum of The Atlantic adds: "This is a genuine post from the president of the country that used to lead the democratic world". From Sen. Andy Kim (D-NJ): "My friend? What an embarrassing failure of a president." Governor Gavin Newsom simply points out: "The correct term is thug."

Spiro's Ghost responded: "This completely deranged and demented post is how you KNOW Putin has massive amounts of compromising info on him. This is just beyond the pale, bizarre, embarrassing ass kissery. There is ZERO upside to or any purpose at all in making this post except to embarrass America. 90% of Americans find this repulsive!"

But my favorite reaction is (again) from covie_93; a post which could well apply to the entire past two years: "Good thing the Republican Party isn't alive to see this."
