A DYNAMIC DUO GLENN & AMY PUTNAM

Sierra Madre's 2010 Citizens Of The Year

The Sierra Madre Chamber of Commerce held its 45th Annual Citizen of The Year Dinner at the Santa Anita Turf Club. Surrounded by family, friends and well wishers, Glenn and Amy Putnam graciously, humbly and at times humorously accepted their award.

This is only the second time in the history of the event that the honor has been bestowed upon a husband and wife couple. The first was the Late Dr. Paul Neiby and his wife Louise, who received the honor last year.

Mayor Joe Mosca was the Master of Ceremonies for the evening. Presentations were made by Chamber Board Member and Mountain Views Publisher Susan Henderson and Board President, Matt Krantz, owner of Bean Town in Sierra

The Putnams, who have been married for 34 years and have lived in Sierra Madre since 1992, are the personification of the essence of this foothill community - volunteerism and community service.

The two of them have worked either as a team or individually with almost every organization in town. This includes the Sierra Madre Historical Preservation Society, The Civic Club, The Garden Club, The Creative Arts Group, Friends of the Sierra Madre Library, the Senior Community Commission and much more. ### PROPERTY OWNER TO RE-OPEN GAS STATION

Sierra Madre is getting another gas station - on the very site where the EVG scandal took place. According to Police Chief Marilyn Diaz, George Attar will open "Sierra Madre Gas" on south Baldwin Avenue. Ironically, there has been a banner in the window of the station for months that says, "Under New Management".

Diaz says that Attar, who could not be reached for comment at press time, is required by the State Department of Weights and Measures to open the station because the tanks have a significant amount of gasoline still in them.

Attar is not under investigation with any crimes that were committed while the station was operated by Evengy Yakimenko. It is not known whether or not the new station will accept credit cards.

In the meantime, the number of victims of the credit card scam has continued to grow. The latest figures from the Sierra Madre Police Department indicate that there are now over 500 victims and the dollar volume has grown to over $170,000. No arrests had been made at press time.

Residents and former patrons of the EVG station are asked to carefully review their bank and credit card statements and report any fraudulent activity. Chief Diaz reminds everyone that regardless as to whether or not the bank corrected the problem, it is important that every incident be reported to the police. Contact the SMPD at Daryl was an artist member of the California Art Club, the San Gabriel Fine Arts Association, and the mid-Valley Art League Creative Arts Group where she taught classes while maintaining a studio in South Pasadena.

A third generation Californian, Daryl was born in Los Angeles, the third daughter of Virginia and Colin Timmons. She grew up in Sierra Madre and graduated from the Polytechnic School in Pasadena and Girls Collegiate of Claremont before attending the University of Southern California. Early classes with Millard Sheets, a long-standing friend of her parents, inspired her to nurture her artistic talents and she sailed for Italy to live and study for a year in Florence, igniting her lifelong passion for that country. Returning home, Daryl earned a degree in graphic design, worked as a commercial art director and experimented with ceramics, printmaking and murals. Ultimately, Daryl focused on watercolor and embarked on the career for which she is known.

A devoted wife, mother, sister and friend, Daryl reflected a spirit of love and generosity wherever she went, always putting the needs and wishes of others before her own. Her life was her art, but her generosity extended to helping others less fortunate. Her philanthropic focus was Pediatric Cancer Research Foundation and the integrated arts program, Tools for Tomorrow.

The wonder of Daryl's beautiful floral and landscape watercolors are her gift, the memory of her graciousness, humor, charm and loving heart are her legacy.

Daryl is survived by her husband of twenty five years, Daniel W. ### Employees at JPL Lose Court Ruling

By Dean Lee

The Supreme Court ruled Wednesday that NASA can subject government contractors to background checks ending a long running lawsuit that started with a decision in October 2007 to require mandatory rebadging for all JPL employees. At the time NASA said those who did not comply would be fired.

Justice Samuel Alito wrote in the court's official ruling, "Reasonable investigations of applicants and employees aid the government in ensuring the security of its facilities and in employing a competent, reliable workforce."

He also said, "The questions respondents challenge are part of a standard background check of the sort used by millions of private employers. The Government has been conducting employment investigations since Republic's earliest and the President has had statutory authority to assess an applicant's fitness for the civil service since 1871."

The ruling was 8-0 with Justice Elena Kagan removing herself citing a previous case she considered as President Obama's solicitor general.

Known as the JPL 28, the group of senior scientists and engineers filed a lawsuit against NASA claiming a violation of constitutional rights since the implementation HSPD-12.

The policy, set froth by then President George W. Bush, Common Identification Standard for Federal Employees and Contractors was implemented as part of post 9/11 programs.

The JPL 28 were granted an injunction the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit. At the time the court said some open ended questions, such as drug use, went too far.

In Wednesday's ruling, the Supreme Court found the questions were reasonable saying there were safeguards in place to make sure the information would not be public. The court rejected the argument that questions were unconstitutional.

"The 'treatment or counseling' question is a follow up question to a reasonable inquiry about illegal-drug use," Alito wrote. "In context, the drug-treatment inquiry is also a reasonable, employment-related inquiry. The Government, recognizing that illegal-drug use is both a criminal and medical issue, seeks to separate out those drug users who are taking steps to address and overcome their problems."

When asked, organizers of the JPL 28 said it was now a personal decision to decide if they stay or leave JPL.

Mayor Gives State of the City

By Dean Lee

The next fiscal year is expected to be the third successive year Pasadena's budget will see significant reductions Mayor Bill Bogaard told a crowd of hundreds during his annual State of the City address Thursday.

"Major revenue sources have fallen dramatically over the past few years, most significantly in the General Fund - the largest operating fund for providing basic city services," he explained. "Sales tax revenues alone have decreased more than $7 million since 2008. The current General Fund budget, approximately $217 million, is at the same level as in 2007." He added that the city council had no choice but to explore ways to reduce expenses even further including employee

ArcLight Cinemas was chosen as the location of this year's address.

Bogaard acknowledged that the city's budget shortfall was not unique to Pasadena saying that California faces a projected $25.4 billion shortfall over the next 18 months. He said Governor Jerry Brown's budget proposal will have further negative impact to Pasadena.

Bogaard said, as a vice president of the League of California Cities, he would be involved in the negotiations at the state level. At the city level he said they also need to take a hard look at current employee compensation and benefit practices including pension programs. An assessment from CALPERS of pensions imposes an increase of $13.2 million over the next three years he said.
Using this year's theme, "Leading the Way,"

Bogaard shared some immediate examples including a ribbon-cutting ceremony that took place Friday at the new Teen Education Center at La Pintoresca Park and the upcoming celebration Jan. 29 to inaugurate a new soccer field at Villa

Last week, work began on the renovation and expansion of the Rose Bowl an icon to the city.

This work is scheduled for completion in time for the 100th Rose Bowl Game in 2014, with the final game of the Bowl Championship Series one week later," he said. "Plans for the project as well as the financing were completed last year."

He also made the announcement that new President of the Tournament of Roses, Rick Jackson, took office Thursday. The123rd Rose Parade theme "Just Imagine" was also announced. He had good news for the school district saying the PUSD Academic Performance Index has risen 52 points since 2007, and more students are scoring at a proficient or advanced level in English, language arts, and math – especially in the middle schools and high schools.

Bogaard wrapped the hour long speech noting the March 8 elections, with the mayor's seat, four City Council seats and three board of education seats on the ballot. He also said this year marks the 125th anniversary of Pasadena's incorporation Effective non-lethal techniques include education on ways to avoid and minimize conflicts, managing trash and other items that attract coyotes, and "hazing" - using scare tactics on coyotes who have become too bold with humans. Coyote hazing helps restore the fear of humans back into habituated coyotes. Hazing involves the systematic use of deterrents such as noisemakers, projectiles and water hoses.

SAFYMCA Kicks Off 2011 Support Campaign For Financial Assistance Program

Monrovia Business Leaders Diane Balsamo and Julie Gentile Co-Chair Campaign

MONROVIA, CA, With two of Monrovia's most active and financially savvy businesswomen at the helm as co-chairs, the nonprofit Santa Anita Family YMCA has kicked off the 2011 support campaign for its Financial Assistance Program.

SAFYMCA board members Diane Balsamo, a home loan consultant for Bank of America and Julie Gentile, a partner in Gentile, Mc-Closkey and Company, are leading the campaign to raise $160,000 to help the Y provide programs and services for youths, teens, families and seniors regardless of their ability to pay full fee. Helping them toward the goal will be a team of 100 volunteers including community members, board members and staff.

"It is especially at times like these when many families are experiencing economic hardship that the programs and services of the Y become even more important, a lifeline to the health of the community," said Balsamo.

Gentile notes that as the need for programs and services increases so does the demand for scholarship assistance. "Kids are especially at risk. This year's campaign theme is 'Ensure a Brighter Future'. Thanks to generous donors, the Y can be counted on to provide a place where kids can enjoy being a kid, swim, go to camp, play a sport, or get help with their homework," she said.

Last year nearly 15% of the 535 kids participating in the Y's day camp and after school programs were able to participate because of the Financial Assistance Program. In addition, 1,850 youths participated in YMCA youth sports and mentoring programs and 1,170 seniors improved their health through fitness classes and workouts in the wellness center.

"BUY IN PUSD" KICKS OFF

By Vivianne Parker

Concerned parents have developed a marketing program to persuade businesses to invest in Pasadena Unified Schools, with the potential of reaching over 1700 buyers, which includes parents, businesses, and educational leaders in the Pasadena, Altadena, and Sierra Madre communities. In turn, these buyers are encouraged to "Buy In PUSD" at businesses where the decal appears to help the schools with funds needed for extra curricular activity, classroom materials, We've seen some wonderful developments in improving our school district," said Robert Niles, organizer of Invest in PUSD Kids, who introduced the program to the public Wednesday at Bob's Big Boy, one of the frequent spots hosting Restaurant Nights for the organization. Bob's Big Boy was determined to be the place to help launch their campaign. According to Darla Dyson, another organizer with the group, over 70 businesses with contributions over $150 have also been recognized.

"Test scores are rising faster than the state average last year," announced Niles. "PUSD students are making regional and national honors for their academic work. So great schools cannot survive without strong communities. So that's why we're here today to thank the businesses that have chosen to support the families and students. With $150 a year, you get a sticker and local businesses can reach thousands of families to invest in a worthy cause...all of Education Superintendent Edwin Diaz thanked the organization for its efforts and the business community "for stepping up to the plate and acknowledging that public schools are important to the community. "It's important for the business community to support our children," he added. "I also would like to thank the parents for taking leadership and taking control of your public schools. And using the power that you have as parents and consumers to provide focus and support for our schools."

"Over the last three years, we've cut 32 million dollars out of our budgets. We've laid off teachers. We've laid off administrators. We've reduced programs - summer school and enrichment programs. These are all programs that kids need to have a full educational experience. The only way for us to continue the progress that you're going to have excellent schools is that the community has to take responsibility beyond the school district. What you're doing here today is you're taking ownership in responsibility for the public schools. That's a model for other districts in other communities in the state."

Linda Machida, Grants Director, at Pasadena Educational Foundation (PEF) was one of the leaders there to support the "Buy In" efforts of the group. As part of her work, PEF has supported the Pasadena Unified in other ways with writing grant proposals, development of both a summer enrichment programs and a robotics program which teaches middle school students about computer programming.

Other supporters on hand were parents like John Fenyes, one of the stay-at-home fathers who does volunteer work at McKinley K-8 School in Pasadena. "At McKinley, it's about doing more for our kids, and it's not just our kids. It's doing more for the school."

Bill Podley, of Dickson Podley Realtors was one of the business leaders who promotes the schools system through the selling of property. "It's important for us to give back and encourage our fellow businesses members to be a part of Buy In PUSD. I'm looking forward to seeing stickers all over town."

Ms. Chaparian's 3rd Grade Class Project

Sierra Madre School 3rd graders are alive with the spirit of giving. Twenty-Eight students in Ms. Chaparian's class have spent the last 3 months making quilts to donate to Project Linus.

Project Linus' mission is to: "provide love, a sense of security, warmth and comfort to children who are seriously ill, traumatized, or otherwise in need through the gifts of new, handmade blankets and afghans, lovingly created by volunteer "blanketeers."

The students learned about the history of quilting and were invited to participate. They discussed the significance of a hand made quilt or blanket to provide comfort when a child might need it most and were asked if they would not only make the quilts but donate them to Project Linus. Five teams of enthusiastic 3rd graders accepted the challenge and hand colored blocks, selected matching fabrics, created the quilt patterns, sewed the blocks together and finished their quilts by hand tying with yarn.

The five completed quilts will be presented to a Project Linus volunteer representative at a special ceremony on January 26, 2010 at 12:15 in the auditorium of Sierra Madre School.

GOOD FOOD & DRINK

Eat Well!

Café 140 South - Post Crocodile Cafe

There is an old adage - if it ain't broke why fix it? Because I was in a curious mood (not to mention hungry) this past week, I called my friend Gregg Smith and invited him out to lunch. Oddly enough I invited him to one of his own restaurants, Café 140 South. You may remember this as the Crocodile Café, a very reliable go-to restaurant for thousands of diners through out the years. Gregg agreed to meet me for lunch; we picked a spot on the al fresco street side patio, so after the how are you's and other pleasantries, as any good reporter I asked Gregg, "So, why the change?" Gregg, answered without blinking, "We wanted to reward our customers with an updated and better choice of entrees." Better choice? Gregg replied, "Expanded choices, including smaller plates, expanded wine list and a cleaner look. We are offering a wine-by-the-glass program that will rival anyone in the area." I glanced at the sign and, sure enough, a glass of Opus One was available for $18. Gregg made sure I understood that there were few other places where you can get a glass of Opus One for that price. OK, but what about the menu? I literally have grown up eating pizza from the Crocodile and the OOOHHH-sooo-good Oakwood grilled cheeseburger ($10.95) is a staple for many local businessmen's weekly lunch visit. Gregg assured me that the best of the original Crocodile menu was still in place, but his brother and partner, Bob, and he wanted to improve on their already successful formula. Their handcrafted pizzas ($12.50 range) have been best sellers for years, but maybe just maybe they could improve on the dough? So I ordered the Margherita pizza. I was indeed blown away by the flavor and, true to Gregg's word, the new dough made such a difference I even ate the crust. My host pointed out that the vine-ripened tomatoes had been cut just minutes before.

TABLE FOR TWO by Peter Dills

Ah - but just one great pizza won't sway this reporter's pen. When it was my turn to order, our server Jasmine came by and without once looking down at her notes, rattled off seven or eight specials. Wow, now that's impressive. I have to repeat to myself ten times at my own address at times. At the top of the menu are Artichokes ($4.95), these, like the burgers are Oakwood grilled. I know a thing or two about Artichokes and they both looked the part of being grilled and were fantastic. I cheated just a bit and cut right into the sweet spot; hey, but more food was on the way. Up next the Thai Salad ($13.50) easily enough for two and Gregg said, "Bravo Peter, that is our Number 1 seller." Plenty of chicken and just the right amount of Thai dressing. I felt the stomach starting to raise the white flag so I quickly ordered the entrée. It was a newcomer to the menu - Stout Braised Short Rib ($16.95), with the stout being one of Samuel Smith's and another winner. Somehow after all this we shared a butterscotch pudding ($6.95). That didn't last too long, either. There is indeed something for everyone here at the "updated" Café 140 South, yes there are veggie dishes, plus salads, pastas, pizzas and the expanded Wine list. Tell me what you think? Thechefknows@yahoo.com

HOWARD Hays

As I See It

Last week Greg decried "blatant hypocrisy" in coverage of the Tucson tragedy. He cited the aftermath of a shooting last August; that when "a black man purposefully killed 8 whites and himself credited liberal rhetoric about racist America as his motivation, the press told us to ignore those associations." The shooter, in fact, turned the gun on himself before anyone had the opportunity to question him about "motivation".

Omar Thornton killed eight co-workers at a beer distribution warehouse in Connecticut, and the media reported that past and present girlfriends said he'd told them about being victimized by racist acts of his predominantly white coworkers. He told of images of nooses and racial epithets scrawled on restroom walls, and of overhearing intentions to "get rid of the n - - r". There was evidence of stolen beer, but none indicating the influence of "liberal rhetoric."

There weren't the warning signs of mental illness in Thornton as there were with the Tucson shooter; he often complained about racist treatment at various jobs, comments directed at his white girlfriend, and was increasingly hounded by debt collectors.

He was also into guns; buying them (legally) in stores and shopping over the internet. The ones he used in the murders were Ruger-9's, which, according to gun websites, were specifically designed for the market created by relaxed concealed-carry laws. His were concealed in his lunch case, and were brought out after he'd signed resignation papers handed him along with evidence of his stealing.

Similarities between that tragedy and the recent one in Tucson include focused outrage from the right not on the crime itself, but on coverage in the media. Last year, the commentary on the Connecticut shootings cited most on right-wing websites was Dennis Prager's. His take on the incident differed from Greg's, but both missed the truth. Greg missed that Thornton complained of first-hand experiences with racism, not of hearing about the subject from "liberals". Prager missed that it wasn't the "liberal media" connecting the murders to racism, but rather the girlfriends and family members whose comments the media reported on.

There's another similarity between reactions to the two incidents. In response to calls to tone down vitriolic and potentially dangerous rhetoric since the Tucson shootings, we've heard cries from the right of "But they do it, too!" In response to allegations of racism related to the Thornton case, Prager expressed his frustration that "(a)fter 50 years of being inundated with stories of white racism, and being taught in college that . . . only a white can be a racist . . . the liberal media . . . does not brand these Connecticut murders for what they are: racist." There's grudging acknowledgement that white people have committed racist acts, "But they do it, too!"

The attitude seems to be, thanks to Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., we now have a colorblind society and whatever problems there may have been were taken care of decades ago. Accusations of "racism" today can therefore be dismissed as attempts to deflect blame for something else. Dr. King has been gone now for more years than he was here on this earth, with both he and the causes he fought for relegated to history books.

Princeton Professor Dr. Cornel West, in an interview with Tavis Smiley on PBS, discussed what he called "the Santa Clausification" of Dr. King; "He just becomes a nice little old man with a smile with toys in his bag, not a threat to anybody . . . rather than acknowledge him as to what he was, what the FBI said, 'The most dangerous man in America". Dr. West explained, " . . . love and justice is a serious thing in a world that's obsessed with fear, hatred and greed, and that's very much what we're talking about."

"A lot of our young people see Martin as just an item in a museum rather than part of a vital and vibrant tradition, part of an ocean." Dr. West offered how he'd explain Dr. King's legacy to his own children: "... he was a human being who mustered incredible courage to think for himself, free, against the grain. You have to be able to think for yourself. You have to be able to cut against the grain, get the distance from your peer group . . . you have to have an habitual vision of greatness, you see. You have to believe in fact that you will refuse to settle for mediocrity. You won't confuse financial security with your personal integrity. You won't confuse your success with your greatness or your prosperity with your magnanimity."

I can remember from my own childhood hearing comments expressing puzzlement over why someone who had already done so much for "his people" in the area of civil rights, who'd attained such acceptance and stature, would risk it all by coming out in opposition to the Vietnam War.

I later learned how, although for most people being awarded a Nobel Prize would be the culmination of a life's work, for Dr. King it signified an obligation to renew and expand efforts in all areas; from poverty to inequality to unjust wars.

Today's debate seems more about the spin media and pundits apply to issues, rather than the issues themselves. There's access to healthcare, particularly mental healthcare. There's inequality of opportunity, particularly educational and economic opportunities.

There's an increasing tendency to resort to violence; guns brought to town hall meetings and a presidential appearance, shootings in Connecticut last August and Tucson earlier this month; a bomb discovered and defused that was set to go off at a Martin Luther King Day parade in Spokane last Monday.

It's hard to say what role violent rhetoric played leading up to these events. It's hard to say what role it played over forty years ago in silencing the one whom the FBI called "the most dangerous man in America".

Smith and Schiff Introduce Drug Safe Harbor Elimination Act

Committee Chairman Lamar Smith (R-TX) and Rep. Adam Schiff (D-CA) introduced the Drug Trafficking Safe Harbor Elimination Act – legislation to close a loophole in U.S. drug enforcement laws and give law enforcement officials greater authority to prosecute individuals engaged in international drug trafficking conspiracies.

"Criminals who plot from within our borders to traffic drugs internationally should not be given a free pass just because the drugs they transport never enter the U.S.," Chairman Smith said. "In order to protect Americans and combat the illegal drug trade, we must ensure that conspirators in the U.S. are brought to justice. We know that the illegal profits from these organizations fuel violence and fund terrorism around the world. And it is increasingly important to combat international drug cartels as the drug war in Mexico brings violence closer to home. This bill will close the dangerous loophole that allows international drug traffickers to avoid prosecution in the U.S."

"In light of the destructive trade in drugs and guns between the U.S. and Mexico, it is more important than ever to eliminate any safe harbor for drug traffickers," Rep. Schiff said. "This bipartisan bill closes a loophole in current law, giving law enforcement officials the ability to prosecute drug trafficking conspiracies conducted in the U.S., even the 112th Congress.

Washington, DC - Today, House Judiciary if many of the illegal acts occur outside our borders." This legislation comes in response to a 2007 decision by the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals. In the case, the defendants were convicted of a conspiracy to transport cocaine from Venezuela to Paris for distribution in Europe. The defendants appealed the conviction on the grounds that the objective of the conspiracy was to procure and distribute cocaine on foreign soil, and as such was not a violation of U.S. law. The government argued that because actions and meetings to further the conspiracy took place on U.S. soil (in Miami), they were subject to punishment under the title.

The 11th Circuit overturned the conviction, finding that Congress's lack of specific guidance on whether the statute should extend to drug trafficking outside the United States necessitated a dismissal. The legislation introduced today will clarify Congressional intent that conspiring to traffic in drugs in the United States is a Federal offense, regardless of where other parts of the conspiracy

This bill was introduced in the 111th Congress, when it passed the House as a companion bill to legislation introduced in the Senate by Senators Kent Conrad and Jeff Sessions. Although it did not pass the Senate to become law during the 111th Congress, the Congressmen hope it will pass during

Letters to the Editor

Today, for the very first time, I read your newspaper! Don't know how I have missed it for so long but I found a copy of Saturday, January 15, 2011 paper at SCPH, Royal Oaks Manor lobby. Many residents here speak so highly and fondly of Sierra Madre and your publication captures the friendly atmosphere of that community (even with the police blotter reports). Interesting ads, informative columns, appealing events, good pictures.

Good job. KB, Bradbury, CA.

Re: the Governor's attempt to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs, and it isn't his goose.

Governor Brown's proposal to do away with Redevelopment Agencies and divert their tax funds to other uses is a serious betrayal of principle and amounts to an attempt to kill our goose that lays the golden eggs.

I basically agree with the Governor on two points

First, solving the budget crisis is going to require a combination of serious budget cuts and at least a temporary extension of present taxes.

Second, to the extent possible, decision making authority should be pushed down to the local governmental level because the decisions should be made by those most directly effected. Such a policy, of course, requires that the local agencies have both legal authority and a reliable source of funds to carry out their responsibilities.

Unfortunately, the Governor's approach to the first is to permanently deprive cities and counties of both the authority and revenue source that they have traditionally had.

There are few decisions as peculiarly local as whether to engage in redevelopment and the details of the plan. Sunday's Pasadena Star-News features the universally applauded redevelopment of downtown Alhambra. There is no way such a matter could be properly decided in Sacrament and no principled basis to say that Alhambra should not be free to make the decision at all.

Furthermore, the property taxes proposed to be taken from the Redevelopment Agencies only exist because of the enhanced property values and thus enhanced property taxes created by the actions of the Redevelopment Agencies. If they kill the Redevelopment Agencies to take these taxes there won't be future tax increments or other economic development to benefit the communities.

If the Governor is going to work out a plan that will work he needs to immediately remove this detail from his plan.

Defending The Constitution

Politicians continue to amaze me, and that's saying something since I've been ready on more than one occasion to think that I've seen it all. But that's what makes my job fun; being amazed that I'm amazed at what politicians will do or expect me - an average American Joe voter to believe. Most recently, we were treated to several U.S. Congressmen telling us that they have no reare not only ludicrous at face value, but dangerous if not countered with a proper understanding of just how important our constitution really is.

First, let's deal with the responsibility issue. Every Congress from the very first one convened in 1789 has sworn an oath as specified clearly in the Constitution. There is no exact wording specified in the Constitution, but article 6 clearly states that they shall be "bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution." The current oath has been around since 1884, and it is administered by the Speaker of the House on a yearly basis to all congressmen – new or returning - on the first day of each new congressional

Thus, it would a great surprise to me if any congressman really didn't realize that he or she had "solemnly sworn (or affirmed) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic... So help me God." So what are we to make of an elected official who either doesn't understand what he or she is supposed to protect and defend or can't remember that he or she is supposed to protect and defend anything? The most charitable thing I can suggest is that they might seriously consider another career option.

But what of the question as to the importance of defending and understanding this constitution? It is possible after all that this oath they swear is simply a quaint tradition... akin to swearing allegiance to a Queen or King who serves a purely figure-head role. Sadly, I do think that many of our elected officials view the constitution in just such a figurative manner. Politicians who want to increase their own personal power and to increase the power of the central government over our individual lives are highly motivated to convince us and themselves that the constitution is just a neat old historical document that we drew up after we through the Brits off the continent.

To view the constitution in such a manner is to miss the genius in it. Our founders were keen students of human nature and behavior. They realized that the quest for power would never be tamed and that any government they created would have to recognize and deal with that one ing the bureaucracies and agencies which already overarching truth. Their solution was to structure government in such a way that two things happened. First, and foremost, they listed the specific powers that the central government was to have and left everything else to the individual states and the people. In this structure, the federal government isn't allowed to do anything that the constitution doesn't specifically authorize it to do. Second, because the federal government did have a tragedy if such a blessed document and system some powers delegated to it, they wanted to make were not defended by politician and voter alike. sure that these powers would be abused as little as three competing institutions: the presidency, the power against the others and thus be forced to compromise and work together. It is a beautiful system which has guaranteed our individual freedoms longer than any other form of government on this planet. It sponsibility to considering whether their actions may not be perfect, but it is the best system ever are constitutional or not. Such pronouncements created, and we are all its beneficiaries in ways and to degrees we will never be able to fully appreciate. We get only a glimpse into the blessings we enjoy when we witness the periodic dissolutions of governments or the rise of dictatorships in other countries. God truly blessed those great > men who created our constitution. Over the decades, there have been several attempts to interpret the constitution in ways that would allow the federal government, and thus the politicians who are drawn to D.C., to exercise more authority over our lives. Today, this effort is being put forward under the guise of interpreting the "commerce clause" in a way that allows the government to mandate that Americans engage in a specific business transaction that they might not want to make. I grant that the commerce clause allows the government to regulate interstate commerce, but it has never been understood as a way the government could force someone to engage in commerce in the first place.

> Obamacare's most dangerous provision is the one that compels citizens to purchase health insurance of a type stipulated by the government and then to fine or jail those who do not comply. If the commerce clause can be interpreted as requiring you or me to buy health insurance, then the "commerce clause", along with the "general welfare clause" and the "necessary and proper clause", could be used to make us do anything. In other words, our freedoms are at grave risk. As our founders understood all too well, if the government's power is not restricted and checked, it will grow unrestrained until we have no freedoms

> Thus, it is absolutely critical that every congressman, every senator, every president, and I'd add every voter, understand what this wonderful blessed document says about our freedoms. Accordingly, I have a couple of recommendations for congress. First, for any proposed law, ask where in the constitution the specific justification for the law is to be found. Second, congressmen should stop writing laws that simply delegate new powers to unelected bureaucrats. If the EPA can decide that CO2 is a pollutant, then it has way too much power. Third, Congress should start policexist and make them justify publicly the various and sundry stupid rules and regulations they've already promulgated.

> We have a wonderful system of government, one that bears the mark of human genius that has guaranteed us all greater freedom and prosperity for a longer period of time than has ever been experienced before in human history. It would be

Most Important Thing for Congress to Concentrate On?

House Republicans be focused on fulfilling their campaign promise to work to overturn the health care reform law, but a new CBS News/New York Times survey finds that a plurality of Americans prefer they focus instead on creating

The poll finds forty-three percent of Americans believe the most important thing for the new Congress to focus on is job creation - compared to just 18 percent who say the top priority should be health care. Fourteen percent chose the federal budget deficit, 12 percent the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, and seven percent illegal immigration. Respondents were presented with a list of options.

The poll also found that a majority of Americans polled - 56 percent - do not believe the health care bill's impact on themselves and their families has been clearly explained. Only 41 percent say it has been explained somewhat or very well, including just one in ten who say it has been explained very well.

Republicans have sought to tie their effort to repeal the health care law to the issue of jobs, labeling the legislation passed last year "job-killing" and "job-destroying." Democrats have used Republican endeavors to overturn the law as a second opportunity to sell the law to the American people after falling short in their first attempt.

This report covers an early release of a pair of questions from the survey. The full poll will be released at 6:30 p.m.

HAIL Hamilton My Turn The Failure of the War on Drugs

I was disappointed by the failure of Prop. 19 -- the legalization of marijuana initiative -- in last November's election, but I was disgusted that its failure at the box office has been spun by the mainstream media and numerous public officials as a reaffirmation of the War on Drugs.

The War on Drugs is a sickening and the ocean of hypocrisy, incompetence, corruption and human wreckage it has left in its wake is almost endless in its magnitude. Originally declared by President Nixon in 1971, the War on Drugs became institutionalized two years later with the creation of the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA).

U.S. involvement in the international narcotics trade began during the Vietnam War when the CIA began shipping home heroin from the Golden Triangle in the body cavities of dead American soldiers. Our involvement has continued unchecked from transporting cocaine from Columbia to pay for the Contras in Nicaragua to money laundering in Panama to the reintroduction of heroin production in Afghanistan.

Incredible isn't it!? The CIA is importing the same illegal drugs the DEA and local law enforcement are arresting street drug dealers and users for, and it is this involvement that have added an extra 1.25 million non-violent drug offenders to our already overcrowded prison system. More insidious has been the domestic laundering of CIA profits by some of America's largest, most respected banks, and offshore by CIA-run financial operations like BCCI, aided and abetted by U.S.-supported dictators like Panama's Manuel Noriega.

Since January 1, 2011, the War on Drugs has cost the American taxpayer approximately $1 trillion -- or more than $700 million a day! This is a total waste of tax dollars; and we just began the new year!

The human cost is much worse. Drug prohibition has decimated generations and criminalized millions for behavior which is entwined in human existence, and for no other purpose than to uphold the defunct and corrupt thinking of a minority of misguided, self-righteous, degenerate, racist demagogues who wish nothing but the unadulterated destruction of blacks and Hispanics.

Based on the unalterable proviso that drug use is essentially an unstoppable and ongoing human behavior which has been with us since the dawn of time, any serious reading on the subject of past attempts at any form of drug prohibition (including alcohol prohibition) would point most normal thinking people in the direction of sensible regulation.

By its very nature, drug prohibition cannot fail but creates a vast increase in criminal activity and, rather than preventing society from descending into anarchy, it actually fosters an anarchic business model

-- the international illegal drug trade. Any decisions concerning quality, quantity, distribution and availability are then left in the hands of unregulated, anonymous and ruthless drug dealers, who are interested only in the huge profits involved.

Thus, the allure of this reliably and lucrative industry, with its enormous income potential that consistently outweighs the risks associated with the illegal operations that such a trade entails, will remain with us until we are collectively forced to admit the obvious -- our failed drug

There is therefore an irrefutable connection between drug prohibition and the crime, corruption, disease and death it causes. Anybody who's not mentally challenged should be capable of understanding that it is not simply the demand for drugs that creates mayhem, it is our refusal -- despite all evidence to the contrary -- to allow legitimate businesses to meet the demand.

Because drug cartels -- the largest being the CIA -- will always have an endless supply of ready cash for wages, bribery and equipment, no amount of tax dollars, police powers, weaponry, wishful thinking or pseudo-science will make our streets safe again. Only an end to prohibition can do that! Remember the positive effects of ending national alcohol prohibition in 1933. How much longer are we willingly to foolishly risk our survival by continuing to ignore the obvious, historically

If you support the mass suicide cult of prohibition, and erroneously believe that you can win a war without logic and practical solutions, then prepare yourself for even more death, tortured corpses, corruption, terrorism, sickness, imprisonment, economic tribulation, unemployment and the complete loss of the rule of law. The only thing prohibition successfully does is prohibit the regulation while turning our schools and streets into black markets for drugs. Regulation would mean the opposite.

I THANK GOD FOR MAKING ME AN ATHEIST

we here? Why is there something rather than noth- (an avid conga drum player and practical joker) was ing? Maybe even the question of Who Am I Really? and finally, Is there something I'm supposed to be doing, and can I help the world?

Yes, I know most people don't seem to have time to ask these questions after they reach a certain age. Still there were a couple of thousand people quietly lined up for hours tonight as we waited to see (or more accurately experience) Stephen Hawking . Professor Hawking, as you probably know, is considered by many to be THE SMARTEST MAN IN THE WORLD. He holds the Isaac Newton Chair at the University of Cambridge and is responsible for theories related to the Big Bang, Black Holes, and the expanding universe. All of this despite the fact that he suffers from ALS and cannot move hardly a muscle. He sits scrunched in his wheel chair with a frozen stoic expression on his face. He is tiny and he doesn't move. His words come through this fancy synthesizer or simulator or whatever that he activates by twitching a cheek muscle. Somehow his presence for me reminds me of the conflicted atheist's statement about God as expressed at the conclusion of the Golden Globe Awards Show. There is something transcendent going on here. I like being free to think about it but it all seems like something more than the operation of randomness and I thank God for making me an atheist and allowing me to explore the feeling without telling me what to think.

Professor Hawking is considered by most to be the greatest living scientist and is thought to be the most influential scientist since Albert Einstein. The major competitor for this title of most important scientist since Einstein is Altadena's own Richard Feynman. The Hawking presentation actually contained little science. Instead it was a prepared brief history of his life together with jokes, witticisms and a sense of fun that emphasized that a big part of life was the ability to enjoy and make the most of whatever came around. In contrast to this was the TEDx Cal Tech presentation of the legacy of Richard Feynman. Yes, I was there too in the hope of finding some answers to the eternal questions. I enjoyed the eight hour presentation which involved about 40 speakers talking about different aspects of Feynman's influence, but my overall experience was that something was missing. The many brilliant men and women were working to make technology faster and smaller but

When and how did the universe begin? Why are still something of the vision of Richard Feynman missing.. The closest that magical vision came to the stage was during the music segments, when Ondar, a throat singer from Tuva performed. Professor Feynman had dreamt of going to Tuva to learn about throat singing, an ability wherein the singer sings in several voices and notes simultaneously. I hate to say it, but this exhibition made me think a little about God and a little about the eternal questions. The singer, dressed in the traditional garb of his almost forgotten country, smiled sincerely throughout his presence on and off the stage. I walked up to him and had some one take a picture of the two of us and I felt authentic warmth from him as we hugged. Since my technical ineptitude prevented me from obtaining a picture of Professor Hawking even though he passed in his wheel-chair just a few inches from me, I am including a picture of the ancient warrior Ondar as representative of the hope for the survival of our poor endangered specie.

Other than Ondar, I had not experienced much contact with the eternal questions in the presentations. There was much talk of technological progress moving on to the smaller and the faster but without much purpose other than the quest for awards and prizes. I had a hollow feeling and shared that thought with the man sitting at the table with me. Synchronistically, he turned out to a guy named Steve Robertson who happens to be behind something called Project Peace on Earth, an attempt to heal the world. (The God in which I do not believe never rests) He, Steve, intends to utilize music emanating from sacred places as a kind of vehicle. He told me about the intended concert which is to come from Bethlehem on November 11, 2011. All sorts of respected and famous people are involved in this project. Perhaps you are interested in this project; I'm going to check it out on the Web.

In conclusion it's nice to know that other people, lots of other people, still search for answers to the eternal questions. The search is a hard one and may take us to strange places, perhaps even to Bethlehem; (it won't be the first time) but it is a search that for me is worth everything. With all the sham I have seen in this world it is inspiring to know that there are still a few could-be shaman around.

1961

Wow! 1961 was fifty years ago. Einstein was right! Time is relative. When you are ten years old one year is roughly 10% of your life. When you are 20 it is 5% and so on and so forth. This may explain why time goes by faster and faster the older we get. Each year becomes a smaller percentage of our entire lifetime. Is this deep? Enough is enough. Let's take a look at 1961.

1961 could certainly be called the year of freedom. That year students of all races took up the cause of ending racism by becoming "Freedom Riders." Busloads rode south to help force integration. Sadly, lives were sacrificed as Americans made the tough choices to help right wrongs and expose injustices.

Speaking of race, the first American (and second person ever) to travel in space, Alan Shepard, suddenly found himself, well, in space. Suddenly may not be the right word. On May 5, 1961 he spent hours sitting atop a Mercury rocket waiting for the launch that would shoot him up and bring him down in 15 minutes. While he was waiting and waiting, nature called, and he did a very childish thing. I'm not coarse enough to come right out with what he did other than to suggest that if Depends (adult diapers) had been available at the time he wouldn't have made as big a mess. He did get another chance at space travel going to the moon his second time out. Nothing childish that I know of happened on that flight...if you know what I mean.

Also in 1961, several thousand Harvard students were tear gassed by police as they demonstrated over a very serious issue. It seems the Harvard administration decided future diplomas would be printed in English and not Latin. This apparently infuriated a big part of the student population. How about pig latin? Will that work? Nothing like a cause to sink your

Skateboarding in California (called sidewalk surfing) took off in 1961, as did the return of the yo-yo, selling 15 million. If you wanted to move up from skateboarding, a 1961 corvette set you back $3,934. A little short? A Porsche only ran you $3,780. The New York Yankees won the World Series. "West Side Story" won best picture. Sophia Loren was the best actress in "Two Women." Maximilian Schell won best actor in "Judgment at Nuremberg." Miss Michigan, Nancy Fleming, became 1961's Miss

Oh, here is an interesting set of statistics. Research in 1961 revealed it took 62 years for electric wiring and 80 years for the telephone to reach 34 million homes. Furthermore it took 49 years for cars and 47 years for the electric washing machine to reach 34 million homes. How many years do you think it took for the television to reach 34 million homes? 10 years

Speaking of television, the top 5 shows of 1961 were: 1. "Gunsmoke", 2. "Wagon Train", 3. "Have Gun Will Travel", 4. "Andy Griffith", 5. "The Real McCoys." In case you're interested "Rawhide" was number 6 (Rawhide introduced us to Clint Eastwood whose characters name was Rowdy Yates.)

In the really important news of 1961 Marvel Comics introduced us to "The Fantastic Four" comic book characters.

Finally, speaking of fantastic, I sat through a dress rehearsal of one terrific play. The Sierra Madre Playhouse's Fairytale Theatre production of "Cinderella." The music is grand with local Jane Fuller playing the lead. What needs to be seen to be believed are the ugly stepsisters, played by good friends of mine, Richard Halstead and Guy Crawford. All the children in the audience play mice and are encouraged to help Cinderella throughout the play. Also, Prince Charming comes out into the audience and dances with any girl in the audience who wants to dance with him. Thank goodness the ugly stepsisters don't come out. As wonderful as watching this play is, it is also a joy to see the look on the children's faces as they become involved throughout the entire play.

The play just premiered Saturday the 22nd. It will be playing the next four Saturdays at 11:00 am at the Sierra Madre Playhouse, 87 W. Sierra Madre Blvd. Tickets are $18.00 for adults and $12.00 for children 12 and under. For reservations call (626) 355-4318.

Congrats to June Chandler for a sensational play. Come and bring kids if you can. But come.

THE WORLD AROUND YOU

with Bob Eklund New Telescope Explores Solar System "Outback"

In the outer reaches of our solar system lies a mysterious region far more aremote and difficult to explore than the Australian outback. It remains the only part of our solar system not visited by spacecraft. Called the Kuiper Belt, this area beyond Neptune is home to the dwarf planets Pluto, Eris, Makemake, and Haumea. It also harbors thousands of smaller objects that form a second, icy asteroid belt (or more appropriately, comet belt). In this realm of perpetual twilight, the distant Sun looks like just another bright

A new telescope located on Haleakala, Hawaii, has begun to explore the "solar system outback," and already is scoring discoveries. The Panoramic Survey Telescope & Rapid Response System (Pan-STARRS) PS1 telescope has found ten Kuiper Belt residents. Based on their brightnesses, the newfound objects range in size from 180

'We're excited that Pan-STARRS is beginning to find these objects," said Smithsonian astronomer Matthew Holman, who leads the Pan-STARRS-1 Outer Solar System Key Project.

It marks the tip of the iceberg for future Pan-STARRS discoveries," he added.

Among the known Kuiper Belt objects, the most famous is Pluto. Discovered in 1930 by Clyde Tombaugh at Arizona's Lowell Observatory, Pluto was considered to be the 9th planet in our Solar System until 2006, when it was reclassified as a "dwarf planet" by the International Astronomical Union (IAU)—primarily because other similar-sized objects had been discovered in the Kuiper Belt. However, many professional astronomers took issue with the IAU decision, and a large part of the public was outraged. In fact, the House of Representatives of New Mexico (where Tombaugh had long resided) resolved that Pluto would always be a planet in New Mexico skies; and the State Senate of Illinois (Tombaugh's birthplace) also passed a resolution condemning the reclassification.

The Outer Solar System Key Project is part of a larger survey to which 60 percent of Pan-STARRS telescope time will be devoted. Over the course of the coming months and years, PS1 will repeatedly survey the full sky that is visible from its location on Haleakala, spotting objects as faint as magnitude 23 (10 million times fainter than visible to the unaided eye). "The survey is expected to find a whole range of objects—from small, nearby asteroids to possibly more dwarf planets," stated Harvard astronomer Pavlos

"By the end of the survey, we'll have an essentially complete census of everything brighter than the survey's limiting magnitude," said Holman. This corresponds to Kuiper Belt Objects about 180 miles in diameter or larger.

Pan-STARRS-1 offers us a remarkable opportunity to study the outer solar system in unprecedented detail," said team member Ying-Tung Chen, a graduate student at the National Central Uni-

Pan-STARRS will allow planetary astronomers to locate many new Kuiper Belt Objects and characterize their orbits. This will provide a firmer understanding of the structure, dynamics, and evolution of the outer solar system. Pan-STARRS is also likely to be a productive tool for discovering new comets.
Pan-STARRS-1 is a 1.8-meter (71-inch) telescope featuring the world's largest digital camera—a 1.4-gigapixel (1,400-megapixel) monster that can photograph an area of the sky as large as 36 full moons in a single exposure. PS1 became fully operational in June

The Pan-STARRS Project is being led by the Institute for Astronomy of the University of Hawaii.

Ask jai is a weekly column that will strive to honestly answer your job search questions relating to job searching techniques, networking skills, resume writing and interviewing. The employment situation is getting better, however, it is still a challenge finding were the jobs are located and how to get pass the "gate-keepers". As an Executive Recruiter I was privy to working directly with Corporate Recruiters and understanding their process in selecting which candidates to interview and hire. I will candidly answer your questions, possibly bluntly answering you questions, but I will be totally honest. My objective is to help you achieve your employment goal.

I have over 15 years experience in marketing and worked for 3 employers. I do not feel that a one page resume tells my story. What is the right number of pages for a resume? Perplexed.

Dear Perplexed,

The appropriate number of pages for a resume depends on your work history and experience. Rule of thumb is no more than two pages. I would suggest one page if you have less than five years experience and two pages if you have more than five years experience. Be sure that you include all the necessary information to get the employer's attention to respond to your interest in their position: Summary of Experience, Work History with accomplishment statements, Computer and Software skills, Industry skills and Education.

I received a call from an employer who said she was reviewing resumes and wanted to ask me only one question: "what type of salary did I want?" I wasn't sure what to say. I was afraid that I would give her an answer that would be too high or low and not be considered for the job. The answer I finally gave her was the salary that I made at my last position. I was really underpaid at my last job. What should I have said? Underpaid.

Dear Underpaid,

Employers typically conduct a "candidate screening call". It sounds like this was a screening call and not a telephone interview. In this scenario there is only one person who does not know what the salary is. That is you. You should always prepare yourself to answer this question during a screening call, telephone interview or office interview.

If you have no idea what the salary for the position is you have all the right in the world to ask the employer. Knowing the salary should also become part of your employment screening process. A possible response could have been "I did not notice a listing for the salary, could you tell me what the range is?" At this point you should be prepared to respond if you are or not comfortable with the range. If the employer does not give you a salary range and pushes you for a response, again, be prepared with a salary response. I would suggest that you give the employer a $5,000 - $10,000 range around the salary you actually want. Be very careful with your response because an employer will usually hold you to what ever salary or salary range you give. ### Sweet Tater

As the youngest of seven children, I spent my childhood growing up in the rural deep south, with loving parents who taught me to be a sensitive, caring person. I had a charmed life, with a big yard, peach trees and a sustainable fresh vegetable garden. We raised chickens & rabbits, and had many pets including dogs, cats and horses.

When I was 6 years old, we had a neighbor who raised hound dogs that he used for the sole purpose of hunting. I remember feeling so sad for those hounds next door, because the owner would nearly starve them between hunting trips, to peak their senses and make the most of their tracking abilities. At times those poor hunting dogs got so thin, you could count the rib bones on either side of their pitiful empty stomachs. When our neighbor would leave his house to go into town, my sister Vicki and I would sneak into his back yard and feed his dogs left-over scraps our mother saved from the dinner table. It broke our hearts to see them snap up the scraps within a few short seconds , then look up at us with those sad eyes, begging for more. It wasn't long before my parents called the humane society and reported our neighbor for animal neglect, and the dogs were taken away.

The memory of seeing those hungry hounds in my neighbor's back yard as a young child stayed with me all of my life. I promised myself I would somehow find a way to make up for the cruelty those dogs had been subjected to, and I decided that one day I would have a bloodhound of my own who would receive the love that they had been

A few years ago, I finally found myself in the position to pursue my long awaited pilgrimage of finding a bloodhound in need of a good home. Before I started my quest, I read a lot about the breed, and I consulted with people I knew who were familiar with their specific characteristics and peculiarities. Within a week after I started my search, I came across a non-profit breed rescue agency called "Bloodhounds West" and I called them to see if there were any dogs available for adoption. The volunteer told me there were no hounds on hand at the time, but when she realized how determined I was, she told me about a young AKC registered female bloodhound that had been bred for show, but had proven to be less than promising in the ring. Apparently the owner/handler had become quite fond of the dog, but had been forced to make the difficult decision to give her up to a loving home when the right person came along. She went on to say that this particular bloodhound was special, and would require more love and attention than most typically do. Well, I could not have custom-ordered a more perfect match! After all, I had set out to find a hound dog in need of lots of tender loving care, and this one apparently needed way more than most! That weekend I drove up to a gorgeous canyon ranch in Saddleback, where I met "Tatertotts" for the first time. When I arrived at the ranch she was in a kennel, cantering back and forth under a huge canopy of old California Oak trees. The excitement that glowed through her big brown eyes stole my heart! I knew I had to have her.

Upon arrival at her new home in Sierra Madre, Tatertotts was quite nervous about being suddenly transported to a strange place with people she did not know. It took me about an hour to convince her that it was safe to go inside the house, but once she was in, there was no getting her out! Little by little, Tatertotts became familiar with her new surroundings and eventually gained full trust in her new owner. Within a few short weeks, we were best

I like to call her "Sweet Tater", because she really is very sweet and because she makes those "poor pitiful me" kinds of looks on her face when she gets hungry or wants her way. My Sweet Tater is indeed a special girl, with very specific, special needs. Most bloodhounds are pretty easy going and for the most part very social, from what I understand, but Tater is different. She is selective when it comes to who she chooses to allow in her personal space. Ironically though, Tater is way more sensitive to the feelings and thoughts of other beings than many other dogs, therefore she reacts more intensely to those who approach her. Regardless of her individual idiosyncrasies, that floppy-eared, sloppy-faced hound dog has made her way into my heart, and become a major part of my life. Each day I am comforted, knowing that Tater receives the unconditional love that my childhood neighbor's dogs did not receive, and I benefit from knowing that I chose to be driven in a positive way by the emotional impact that early childhood experience had on me. And I tell you what, Sweet Tater appreciates that very much!

A frequent topic of computer security discussions is the so-called "Zero-Day exploit". A Zero-Day exploit is defined as a computer vulnerability being used by a hacker taking advantage of the vulnerability on the same day as the vulnerability is generally known, before software vendors have had a chance to fix the issue. There are typically "zero days" between the discovery of the exploit and the attack, hence the name. In most cases when vulnerability is found in computer code, the discoverer will notify the company responsible for creating and publishing the software (and sometimes the computing community at large) so that a fix can be developed and implemented before any real damage is done. Even if hackers happen to learn about the exploit as the same time as the software publisher they may not be able to take advantage of the vulnerability before it is fixed. When the hacker also happens to be the discoverer of the exploit and the vulnerability wasn't generally known in advance, there may be no effective way to guard against an attack using this new vector. For these instances, security software companies have devised programs and sub-routines that look for specific, suspicious activity (such as requests to format drives that do not originate from the console) and disallow such actions.

The name "Zero-Day exploit" itself is a bit misleading because in many instances the vulnerabilities that are taken advantage of have been know to either the software company or hackers themselves for quite some time before "something bad" happens. Many of the larger software manufactures have entire well-financed sections of their operations devoted to identifying, tracking and repairing security holes in their products. Sometimes there are differing opinions as to what constitutes a vulnerability needing immediate attention and a bug to be fixed in the next scheduled software update.

The best thing you can do to protect against zero-day exploits is to follow good security policies in the first place. By installing and keeping your anti-virus software up to date, blocking file attachments to emails which may be harmful and keeping your system patched against the vulnerabilities you are already aware of you can secure your system or network against 99% of the bad stuff that's out there.

One of the best measures for protecting against currently unknown threats is to employ a hardware or software (or both) firewall. You can also enable heuristic scanning (a technology used to attempt to block viruses or worms that are not yet known about) in your anti-virus software. By blocking unnecessary traffic in the first place with a hardware firewall, blocking access to system resources and services with a software firewall or using your anti- virus software to help detect anomalous behavior you can better protect yourself against the dreaded zero-day exploit.

It was a particularly frigid winter, wouldn't you say? We got a lot of rain, which helps the environment and lets me get away with not washing my car. Besides keeping us soggy down here in the foothills, the rain and cold ushered in a familiar winter guest. I'm not talking about your relatives from the northern Mid West who time their visits to coincide with the weeks they'd be most likely to slip on a patch of ice on their porch; I'm talking about snow. It shined and twinkled at us from the peaks as we drove along the freeway, and beckoned to the

I love the hot sun and hate being cold. I think snow is best appreciated as part of a nice documentary viewed from the warmth of my couch. My husband, however, is passionate about snowboarding. When we were first dating, he invited me to hit the slopes with him, and offered to buy me the clothes necessary for such a venture. I persuaded him to only purchase the pants; I would assemble the rest of the outfit from my existing cold weather clothes. In the back of my mind I knew it would likely be my one and only winter sports experience

(which it was), and I didn't want to feel guilty that his money was spent in vain (it was). I have absolutely no athletic skills even under the best conditions. So needless to say, I spent most of the day on my rear. I don't know who invented the snowboard, but having your feet strapped to a plank at hips width makes you feel like one of those little green toy soldiers. For my husband, the board is a natural extension of his legs, allowing him to cut and glide through the snow. I, on the other hand, found myself tipping forward almost as often as I fell backwards. The snow insidiously found a way inside my boots and jacket; the only thing keeping it from refreezing was my constant movement. After several hours of alternately slamming my wrists and bottom, I was cold, clammy and sore. I wanted to cry but managed to keep laughing at my pathetic attempts at grace and

We decided to have some friends join us for our next trip to the snow so that my husband wouldn't have to snowboard alone. A couple of the non-snowboarding girls and I walked around Mammoth while the others spent hours going up and down the hill. I soon got tired of having to put on my mittens and take them off every time we entered and exited a store. I slipped a few times on the slushy sidewalk and toppled onto a couple eating lunch at an outside table (who eats outside with a wind chill factor?). At least their drinks were empty; otherwise it could've been even more embarrassing. That night our rented condo quickly ran out of hot water, so I had to shower cold. I seriously considered staying dirty, and probably would've if the others weren't with us. I'm usually easy to please and overlook minor inconveniences, but the snow did something horrible to me - it turned me into a diva!

Since then I have cheerfully sent my husband off on any snowy excursion he wishes to take. People sometimes say it's so nice of me to let him go off and have fun while I stay home. Smiling, I nod and keep my real motives to myself.

started the business back in 1987 as Crescenta Valley Tile. A short time later they moved to the current Monrovia location. Now three decades in business, Reiber, President, and son, Shawn Robb, COO, now run this large Monrovia company as CV Tile, a "one-stop" tile and stone shop. "Seeing our operation from the street, most people don't realize our operation is so big."

Carrying over 100 lines from companies all over the world, CV offers a 10,000 square foot stone, tile and cabinetry showroom, 8,000 square foot warehouse, an 18,000 square foot slab yard with exotic and mainstream marble and granite, in house stone and tile designers to work with consumers and contractors plus an in house fabricator and installation arm.

Concept boards with thousands of different combinations are available to inspire and whet your design appetite. If you don't find just the right stone or tile combination size or finish, CV can probably make it for you.

Over the years, CV has developed a reputation as the "go to" company for intricate custom tile products. "In these economic times, most manufacturers maintain minimal inventory instead of stocking six to eight sizes of a particular stone tile. We can fill in the gap, either for the manufacturer or the consumer. By using our onsite water jet, multi-bladed saw and stone tumbling equipment, we can custom size an 18"x18" tile into long narrow 6" tiles for a backsplash, inset or mosaic, or tumble stone tiles to a shape or finish not currently available in manufacturer stock. And it's all done in house," reflects Robb.

Tips of the Trade: Real Estate Revealed

by Luther Tsinoglou

Deciding on an asking price for your home is challenging enough these days, but you need specific pricing strategies for particular scenarios, especially if you're under pressure to move quickly or your home isn't selling after being on the market for several months. Here are suggestions for both situations.

If you're facing a deadline due to job relocation or other reasons, then you need to price competitively, even more competitively than expected in today's market. You'll need to list at significantly less than your competition. Think 15% less. That may seem tough to stomach, but it's better than continuing your monthly loan payments or the hassle of trying to find tenants to rent your home.

If your home has been listed for some time, but not generating interest, you'll need to lower your price. Of the three elements that sell a home - price, location, and condition - price is the one you'll have the most control over.

If home values have declined in your neighborhood, the price you originally listed at a few months ago may now be too high and out of line with comparable listings. Now would be the time to have your real estate agent prepare a new Comparative Market Analysis (CMA) and reevaluate your pricing strategy. If you've got to sell, and sell now, price it like you mean for thirty years. His clinic, LifeWorks! Chiropractic, offers patient-specific approaches to the alleviation of pain and individually tailored wellness programs.

Here we are in the waning half of January 2011. You may have noticed the increased numbers of people running and walking during the first two weeks of the month, only to puzzle over where they might be now. To be fair, many are still out there working on their resolutions, yet a significant percentage has fallen by the wayside. So, is there a way to work toward a better version of ourselves without taking all the fun out of life?

The Inside Track

Sure, what often gets us to make changes is the disquiet we feel at a tightening beltline or the extra chin we stare at in the bathroom mirror, but this won't sustain us in the long run. After all, we have to live with ourselves, and liking ourselves makes this easier. In order to get all of the different personalities living inside us on the same page (the hamburger-loving teen and the runway model/ NBA star), we need a code that harmonizes the clan. Similar to the concertmaster tuning the orchestra to one key, we need to create our own "tuning." A simple, gentle reminder such as "I am enough," or "I accept myself," can allow integration to take

Pharmacists Offer Recommendations to Guide Public Through Cold and Flu Season

WASHINGTON, DC- The American Pharmacists healthy meals. Association would like to remind the public about the importance of speaking with their pharmacist during cold and flu season. A pharmacist can help patients with such things as getting a flu shot, identifying the differences between a common cold and the flu, suggesting the best over-the-counter medications and offering a recommendation when a health care provider should be seen.a

The common cold and influenza are two of the most easily transmittable diseases in the United States. Although the common cold is usually mild, with symptoms lasting one to two weeks, it is a leading cause of doctor visits and missed days from school and work. Typically, children suffer from five to seven colds each year and adults from two to three. According to the CDC, on average 5% to 20% of the U.S. population becomes ill with influenza, more than 200,000 people are hospitalized and more than 24,000 people die from seasonal flu-related complications.

Knowing whether you have the common cold or the flu can be complicated, and the common symptoms are sometimes indistinguishable:

Common ColdThe Flu SneezingFever and/or Chills

Stuffy or Runny NoseStuffy or Runny Nose Sore ThroatSore Throat

CoughCough Watery EyesFatigue

Mild Head or Body AchesPronounced Head or Body Aches

. Vomiting/Diarrhea (more common in children than adults)

A pharmacist can discuss your symptoms with you and offer advice on the best course of action. If a patient has the flu, and it is still within the first two days, a pharmacist can advise the patient and offer solutions including further evaluation and treatment options that may include prescription antiviral therapy from an authorized prescriber. If a patient has a cold, viral sinus infection or has past the two-day window with influenza, a pharmacist can suggest the best overthe-counter medications to fit his/her symptoms.

Optimizing Your Pharmacist's Over-The-Counter Medication Suggestions

Discuss the symptoms you are trying to treat, and the duration of those symptoms, with your pharmacist. Provide your pharmacist with a list of all the medications - prescription, over-the-counter and herbal - you are currently taking and any over-thecounter products you have already used and the results Remember that sometimes, the best medicine is none at all. Your pharmacist may recommend just

Provide the age and weight of the patient to your pharmacist. This is especially important with children's products, as formulations are different depending on the weight of the child.

Read product labeling, take the medication exactly as directed, learn of possible side effects, and ask your pharmacist what should be avoided while taking the Watch for duplicate ingredients. If you are giving your child more than one OTC medication check the active ingredient(s) used in each medication to make sure you are not giving your child more than one product with the same active ingredient.

Do not use a kitchen spoon to measure liquid medications. Obtain appropriate medication administration aids (i.e. droppers, syringes, spoons, etc.) and ask the pharmacist how to use them properly. Don't give medications in the dark. Turn on the lights if your child needs medication at night. Do not give medication to a child who is not fully awake.

Remember, most OTC medications are for temporary relief of minor symptoms. Contact your pharmacist or health care provider if your condition persists or gets worse.

The flu, common colds and most other upper respiratory infections are caused by viruses and are NOT treated with antibiotics. An antiviral will reduce the symptoms of the flu if received within the first 48 hours of symptom onset. There is still time to protect your family from the flu, the CDC recommends all persons six months or older receive an influenza vaccine. The vaccine is available throughout the flu season or as long as supply lasts. Make sure to speak with your pharmacist about your vaccination needs. APhA encourages consumers to follow good health practices to prevent the spread of influenza, colds and other transmissible illnesses. Consumers are encouraged to cover their mouth and nose during a cough or sneeze, avoid touching the eyes, nose or mouth, and wash their hands frequently. Other good health practices to follow include using alcohol based hand sanitizer, getting plenty of regular sleep and avoiding work, school or other places of close contact when you are sick. About the American Pharmacists Association

The American Pharmacists Association, founded in 1852 as the American Pharmaceutical Association, represents more than 62,000 practicing pharmacists, pharmaceutical scientists, student pharmacists, pharmacy technicians, and others interested in advancing the profession. APhA, dedicated to helping all pharmacists improve medication use and advance patient care, is the first-established and largest

SPORTS

By Bobby Eldridge

In order to hit the golf ball further and more consistent, after you grip the club-check your knuckles EVERY TIME. I have a question for you that you have to answer in two seconds. Is gripping the golf club an art or a science? Think about it for 10 seconds if you want to. Do you know why I am giving you 10 seconds to think about it? Ten seconds is longer than you take to think about gripping the club when your on the golf course.

When most amateur golfers struggle with their golf game it can be traced right back to the grip the golf club. What I have heard for the past 35 years is "I am really struggling with my swing"-DON'T TOUCH MY GRIP. "I keep coming over the top"-DON'T TOUCH MY GRIP. "I can't stop hooking the ball"-DON'T TOUCH MY GRIP.

Here is the problem. Changing your grip can be a nightmare. I don't care if you have played for six months or 30 years, for you to make a grip change, it can be a long and painful process. I started playing golf when I was 2 years old, by the time I was 13 I was bigger and stronger and I had a very strong grip. I hooked the ball way too much. My mom told me it was time to weaken it, It was the longest year of my life.

I am going to let you in on two little secrets that nobody talks about. If you slice the golf or if you hit weak fades to the right, changing your grip will be the most exciting and rewarding thing you will do for your golf game. You will fall in love with me in five minutes. (OK, maybe a little overboard-can you tell I am excited)? On the other hand. If you hook the ball you will want to wrap that driver around my neck for about three months AND then you will also fall in love with me.

That is secret number one. Now for secret number two. Whether you are a slicer or hooker of the golf ball, changing your grip can be very uncomfortable. I have a saying that I have used with my students for 20 years. As soon as they change their grip and make solid contact they always say to me "it doesn't feel good". And I always say to them you have a choice, you can either hit it poorly and feel good or hit it great and feel poorly".

Let me tell you why the knuckles are so important. Let's talk about slicing first. After you grip the golf club and address the golf ball, when you look down at your left hand, you probable don't see any knuckles. of the left hand. You see the top of the left thumb. The problem is the clubface will not close in time for you to hit a draw. This next part is really important. Before you start your backswing, simple turn BOTH hands to the right the same amount. Do it in baby steps. Turn the hands on the club so you can see one knuckle, and hit some balls from this position. If you get rid of your slice then stop. You have hit gold, that is the correct grip for you. This is a very powerful change, that is why you will love it.

On to the golfers that hook the ball. After you grip the club and address the golf ball you will look down and see three or four knuckles of the left hand. The clubhead will close way to fast in the downswing from with this grip. You have to move BOTH of your hands to the left the same amount. Do it in baby steps, one knuckle at a time. The reason this is more painful than the grip change above is because you are going from a stronger position to a weaker position. You will not feel the love for some time. I know you can do this, I did.

In closing after you grip the club-check your knuckles EVERY TIME and you will begin to see the ball start flying straighter and further.

Rose Parade Concept for the 2012 Parade

The 2012 Rose Parade theme pays homage to all things possible and impossible. It is about potential and our hope, our discoveries and fascinations. It is about looking for beauty in things rare and common.

On one hand, it harkens to a Dr. Seuss-like imagining of all of the wondrous dreams of our childhood where reality playfully turns inside out or upside down. On the other, it triggers thoughtprovoking questions of what visionary people with a common purpose can accomplish to change and inspire us.

The Parade theme provokes images of children lying on grass seeing pictures in clouds; scientists searching the stars for new worlds to discover; far away places imagined by the poets and storytellers of the ages; determined athletes giving their all in service of the ultimate prize; musicians, dancers, painters, actors and sculptors expressing their gifts on the palettes of their vocations; and the visualization of a future in which creativity and innovation are the twin masters of our dreams.

While this theme seems to beg for the sculpture of storybook fantasies and the world of a child's imagination, it can also be expressed as a reflection of the achievable hopes and dreams of adults, the remarkable accomplishments and innovations of business, and the world vision of an optimistic

Heartfelt and uplifting, the Rose Parade theme explores original ideas from the very small to the phenomenal, with an emphasis on touching hearts and inspiring lives. Most of all, it is a theme full of opportunities for fun. Our goal is to leave the audience in a state of suspended disbelief whispering one word... "wow!."

_Thematically, this idea is a treasure-trove of possibilities, especially as it comes at the beginning of a new year. It should celebrate a new year of opportunity, underscore the brilliant imaginings of our past, and inspire us to reach higher, try harder, and believe in our dreams.
