AB 156 expands wiretapping law to include human trafficking

Assemblymember Chris Holden (D-Pasadena) has introduced legislation designed to give enforcement a new tool to crack down on the bad guys. Under AB 156, law enforcement officers will be able to get a court order for a wiretap when they suspect human trafficking of minors.

You would think in this day and age when traffickers have become more sophisticated, law enforcement would have all the tools it needs to stop these criminals. But you would be wrong," said Assemblymember Holden. "This bill will change that and help stop this modernday slavery that threatens our children, our families and our neighborhoods." Law enforcement is currently authorized to obtain a court order to wiretap for investigation of drug trafficking or criminal gang activity, but not human trafficking. Under this bill, law enforcement officers can ask a judge for wiretap permit to investigate sex trafficking of a minor.

Estimates are that 100,000 children nationwide are exploited each year.

The California Police Chiefs Association takes human trafficking very, very seriously", stated John Lovell, Legislative Advocate for the "California's Association. wiretap laws have been crucial in going after complex, multilevel criminal activities. The reality is that human trafficking is an organized criminal enterprise, and the full range of enforcement tools are needed to combat this particular crime."

"It is heartbreaking to hear the stories of these youngsters who are pimped and branded and badly mistreated. think of my daughter and her friends and I want to do everything possible to stop these horrible crimes. It's the least we can do to protect our children," concluded Holden. Similar laws are already on the books in several other states including Texas, Illinois and Maryland.

"What's Going On?"

News and Views from Joan Schmidt

Way back at the end of '92 and early '93, Pamela Park was definitely not the place to be. That whole area of unincorporated Duarte was very dangerous. It took a lot of team effort from various LA County Sheriff's Units and the community to make it safe. The Civil Gang Abatement, Operation Safe Street Bureau's stings, use of cameras, then- Captain Tom Sams and members of the Special Enforcement Bureau as well as our local deputies, made many arrests and the Community's Rally/March against drugs/ gangs began the transition. The worst problem was Goodall and its many outlets. But a road blockade was put up which reduced escape routes. Eventually the new gymnasium was built, and many events were held there. More people began to come to the Park.

Over the next ten years I attended various evening events and, once or twice, a party at the Park. Then I stepped down from the Town Council and was out of touch for several years. But I missed my friends and community involvement, so I resumed writing for a newspaper over a year ago, and attended community events. Every Pamela Park function reinforced all the positive stories of great programs: parenting classes, tutoring, teen volunteers, sports programs and much more.. Most recently, I dropped off papers at their office and noticed the great new playground equipment which has something for kids of all

Two weeks ago, we brought our New Jersey visitors, son Dan, daughter-in-law, Jess and two-year old granddaughter, Sam, and our five year old Chino grandson Jacob to Pamela Park. Over the years, Jess had won numerous medals as a gymnast, and she was so impressed with the quality of the equipment as well as the safety of Park is from California, then east on Pamela the matting. slant and went fast! There was not just the usual climb up slide and tunnel, but a telescope, and binoculars! Everyone had so much fun that they all returned the next day with my son Rick and daughter Karen off from work. That Sunday we visited our daughter Kathryn. After hearing all about the Pamela Park equipment, she announced she's be bringing our one-yearold over there on her next visit! And this past Monday, when my son's two older children were visiting, (They are eleven and thirteen), the entire entourage returned to Pamela Park and had a blast!)

What I especially like are picnic tables with canopies over them, clean and accessible restrooms, drinking fountains and an office with worker/s if you needed anything. Also there are outdoor bulletin boards that post community upcoming events, programs, and classes. A visit to Pamela Park makes a great family day, and it is accessible by walking or car. We are on the other side of California Avenue and the easiest way to approach the See you at the park!

On Martin Luther King Day day at the annual WTI (a local non-profit) gathering, we watched "To Sleep in Anger," a 1990 film directed by Charles Burnett. The film is about a black family residing in South-Central Los Angeles. One day, an old acquaintance (Harry, played by Danny Glover) came to visit the Gideon and his wife Suzie. Harry seems to be a good old friend, but always seems to stir up trouble. The family already had some conflicts but they seemed to get worse when Harry was there.

Eventually, Gideon has a stroke, and Babe Brother, the younger son, is heavily influenced by Harry. Babe Brother is about to leave his wife. The older brother, Junior, confronts Babe Brother before he departs and a fight erupts - with a knife. The mother tries to break it up and her hand gets cut, and they rush her to the hospital.

The incident brings many of the family's conflicts to the forefront, and seems to unite them in a positive way once all recognize the negative influence of Harry, and Harry is asked to go.

To me, "To Sleep With Anger" is a classic film, full of the issues that any family faces. Indeed, much of this reminded me of my semi-dysfunctional family with our many failures and some successes.

Sometime in the mid-1990s, I went to a viewing of this film at CalTech where filmmaker Burnett was there to talk to the crowd and answer questions. It was a wonderful event. I'd already seen the movie but was compelled to see it where I could talk to the writer and director. I asked him about some of the little details, like the young boy trying to play the horn, and the boy who fed the pigeons. These were little details that added a depth to the movie, though they had nothing to do with the plot. Mr. Burnett told me that that boy represented him, which made me smile. Watch the movie, and see how the boy and his horn practice somewhat frames the movie.

And Harry – who does he represent? You have to see it and figure it out for yourself.

The movie won several awards, but I had never heard of it before a friend pointed it out to myself and Dolores back in the mid-90s.

"I think this is a great movie," I told Mr. Burnett. "So why do you think it's gotten so little attention?" Burnett's answer was quick, and initially surprised me.

"Because there are all black actors," he said matter of factly. "Really?" I said. Well, in fact, there were a few token whites in the movie, like one of the paramedics. Still, the movie was so good, capturing "family-ness" so well, that I just naturally assumed people would be color-blind and go see it and benefit from it.

If you haven't seen it, it can be rented or purchased at video places. I hope you view it and enjoy it

COMMERCIAL ASTEROID HUNTERS

Commercial Asteroid Hunters Announce Plans For New Robotic Exploration Fleet

Deep Space Industries announced Jan. 22 that it will send a fleet of asteroid-prospecting spacecraft out into the solar system to hunt for resources to accelerate space development to benefit Earth. These "FireFly" spacecraft utilize low-cost CubeSat components and get discounted delivery to space by ride-sharing on the launch of larger communications satellites.

"This is the first commercial campaign to explore the small asteroids that pass by Earth," said Deep Space Chairman Rick Tumlinson (who signed up the world's first space tourist, led the team that took over the Mir space station, was a Founding Trustee of the X Prize, and Founded Orbital Outfitters, the world's first commercial space suit company.) "Using low-cost technologies, and combining the legacy of our space program with the innovation of today's young high-tech geniuses, we will do things that would have been impossible just a few years ago."

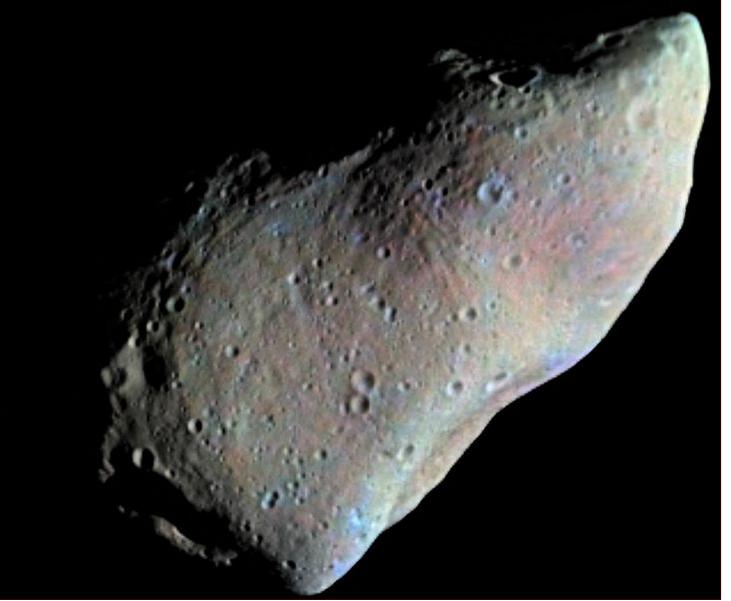

FireFlies mass about 55 lb and will first be launched in 2015 on journeys of two to six months. Deep Space will be building a small fleet of the spacecraft using innovative miniature technologies, and working with NASA and other companies and groups to identify targets of opportunity.

"My smartphone has more computing power than they had on the Apollo Moon missions," said Tumlinson. "We can make amazing machines smaller, cheaper, and faster than ever before. Imagine a production line of FireFlies, cocked and loaded and ready to fly out to examine any object that gets near the Earth."

Starting in 2016, Deep Space will begin launching 70-lb DragonFlies for round-trip visits that bring back samples. The DragonFly expeditions will take two to four years, depending on the target, and will return 60 to 150 lb. Deep Space believes that combining science, prospecting and sponsorship will be a win/win for everyone, both lowering costs for exploration and enabling the public to join the adventure.

"The public will participate in FireFly and DragonFly missions via live feeds from Mission Control, online courses in asteroid mining sponsored by corporate marketers, and other innovative ways to open the doors wide," said CEO David Gump, whose earlier ventures include producing the first TV commercial shot on the International Space Station for RadioShack as well as cofounding Transformational Space Corp. (t/Space) and Astrobotic bigger things for DSI. The company has a patent-pending technology called the MicroGravity Foundry to transform raw asteroid material into complex metal parts. The MicroGravity Foundry is a 3D printer that uses lasers to draw patterns in a nickel-charged gas medium, causing the nickel to be deposited in precise patterns.

"We will only be visitors in space until we learn how to live off the land there," concluded Tumlinson. "This is the Deep Space mission—to find, harvest and process the resources of space to help save our civilization and support the expansion of humanity beyond the Earth—and doing so in a step-by-step manner that leverages off our space legacy to create an amazing and hopeful future for humanity. We are squarely focused on giving new generations the opportunity to change not only this world, but all the worlds of tomorrow. Sounds like fun, doesn't it?"

DR. K. HEINER VOGELBACH TO BE HONORED AS KING OF MARDI GRAS 2013

gelbach, MD, will be honored at Methodist Hospital's Mardi Gras Tuesday, February 12, at Sirona's, Santa Anita Park.

For his faithful support of Methodist Hospital and the haps exceeding $100,000. clinical care he has provided to thousands of patients as director of cardiology over the past 15 years, Dr. Vogelbach has been selected to preside as king of Mardi Gras 2013, one of the hospital's most popular fundraising events.

More than 500 local community members and businesses, including two dozen restaurants, are expected to participate in the 18th annual "beads and boas" celebration February 12 at Sirona's Restaurant, Santa Anita Park, 285 W. Huntington Dr., Arcadia.

The fun-filled event will feature a 1980s theme against a backdrop of old New Orleans to raise money in support of the hospital's outstanding cardiac catheterization lab. Co-chairing this year are four-time chair/cochair Lindburgh McPherson, Methodist Hospital Foundation board member Sherry Wang and longtime hospital supporter Patty Soldo.

"Methodist Hospital is a great organization that does so much good for the community, and when I was asked to cochair again, I couldn't say no," McPherson said. "Plus, I have a great deal of fun participating." Lindburgh, who first chaired

"Through the years we've seen more participation from the smaller healthcare entities such as nursing homes," Lindburgh said. "That's a good thing. We're especially excited this year because Dr. Vogelbach has been a terrific supporter of Methodist Hospital and Mardi Gras. It's really fitting that we recognize him as our king in 2013."

Aside from his work as director of cardiology, Dr. Vogelbach is a member of the Methodist Hospital Foundation board of directors. He has chaired the Crystal Ball and serves on the Crystal Ball Committee, is cochair of the Cardiac Council and has been involved in fundraising initiatives such as the physician campaign supporting The Next Generation of Care. Through the years the Germanborn physician has encouraged patients, friends and associates to support the hospital.

"This is my second Mardi Gras," said co-chair Patty Soldo. "I am a nurse, and my husband is a cardiologist who works with Dr. Vogelbach. I am excited to help the cardiologists in any way I can." She said she hopes to see more of the newer and younger community members attend the 2013 event to raise the "Fat Tuesday" event in 2009, funds that will enable the Cath

'Sherry (Wang) asked me to participate this year, and I couldn't say no," Patty said.

Sherry, a member of the Mardi Gras committee for the past 10 years, also hopes to see more young members from within the community become involved with the event this year. "This is not only a fund-raising event; it is a friend-raising event," she said. "It's a perfect venue to break into a new environment."

Mardi Gras has undergone many changes through the years. Once a black-tie event, the celebration is now more casual. The Mardi Gras parade, featuring the Arcadia High School Pep Band, started three years ago. With a live band performing each year, the event has become a prominent and enjoyable one for all who attend.

The 80z All-Stars, one of Southern California's premier 1980's tribute bands, will provide the evening's lively entertainment. Other activities will include a silent auction, the annual Mardi Gras parade, an Elvis Presley impersonator, dancing and mouth-watering culinary de-lights prepared by some of San Gabriel Valley's most celebrated and successful restaurants.

EDUCATION & YOUTH

FORTY-SEVEN ALVERNO SENIORS MAKE A COMMITMENT TO GIVE BACK Alverno High School Community Service Fair raises more than $1,100 for charities

Sierra Madre, CA – Alverno High School recently hosted its Third Annual Alverno Community Service Fair, which showcased the senior class' self-created service projects ranging from fighting abuse and cancer to providing funds for schools and art

The fair grew out of Alverno's senior theology course, Contemporary Social Issues, which asks students to explore the social justices that taint our world. To respond to these injustices, Alverno's 47 seniors have committed themselves to a service project molded by their own passions, ideas and care for the social issues in today's world.

and local community came together to learn about and support the projects of these exemplary seniors at the Third Annual Alverno Community Service Fair. Individuals were asked to purchase $1 tickets upon entering the fair, which they could then place into a jar on each table to demonstrate their support for that particular charity. Desserts, specialty items, pop culture pins, neck warmers, headbands, homemade jewelry, and much more were also available to be purchased using the same tickets. At the end of the fair, each of the tables turned in their tickets to receive the money that had been contributed to their chosen charity. These funds will be donated directly to the charity or will be used to fund a larger service project designed by a senior. In total, more than $1,100 was raised for local, national, and worldwide organizations.

In addition to philanthropic support of the organizations at the fair, attendees were also given the opportunity to sign-up to volunteer with local organizations that included: Angeles Mesa Elementary School, Bad Weather Shelter (Pasadena), Children's Hospital Los Angeles, Door of Hope (Pasadena), Elizabeth House (Pasadena), was spread to the younger students. It is Good Shepherd Center for Homeless Women and Children (Los Angeles), Hillsides (Pasadena), Keep it Kind, Kids Enjoy Exercise Now (KĒEN), Maryvale (Rosemead), One More Reader, Our Lady of Guadalupe School, School on Wheels, Soldier's Angels (Pasadena), and Surfrider Foundation. Alverno High School students are expected to contribute 20-50 service hours each to the local community each year, for a school wide total of more than 6,000 hours. However, last year Alverno students exceeded their goal by contributing more than 11,000 service hours to the local community and they are once again expected to exceed their goal.

At the service fair, members of the Alverno Many students have created their own small projects, ranging from fighting for animal rights, equality, ending child abuse, providing supplies for schools, aiding those with developmental or physical disabilities, those with incurable diseases, funding for girls' education and cleaning up our local

> Additional students have created internal programs to prevent loneliness or depression. There will be many collections happening on campus throughout the next two months as a part of these projects including a book drive, a baby item drive, school supply drive, and collecting items for packages to be sent to soldiers, and a kindness letter writing campaign.

> "The Service Fair was a wonderful success and we are so proud of our seniors. All of our students as well as faculty, staff and community members, were able to browse over two dozen service projects. Each project was built to spread awareness and encourage action in regards to a specific social issue," said Susana Capra, Campus Minister. "The seniors were so passionate often easy to lose sight of how powerful and intelligent a teenager can be in our society today. This service fair showed how wonderful, creative and socially aware high school students are and how much they can inspire those around them. It was a beautiful reminder of the solidarity and justice that is very alive in our world.

Ann Gillick, Head of School, said "The Service Fair is a perfect example of how one individual can make a tremendous impact on her community. Each of these young women chose a project that meant something to her and in turn made that project important to our entire community. #### THE REEL DEAL: by Ben Show Movie Reviews Especially for Teens & 'Tweens 'MAMA'

I've read and seen many horror movies and books. 'The Shining', 'It', 'Paranormal Activity', and the 'Skeleton Creek' series, but none of them have affected me as much as 'Mama' has. It's not that it was the scariest movie I've seen (that goes to 'The Shining'), but it has a deeper meaning that just some demon going around and killing people.

After terrible events take his wife's life, a father takes his two daughters, Victoria (Megan Charpentier) and Lily (Isabelle Nelisse), and leaves. They end up in a car accident, with nowhere to go. However, while wandering through the woods, he finds a cabin, where they take refuge. They are not alone. The demon kills the father, and looks after the two girls. Five years later, they are found and, after a custody battle with his sister, are given to the brother of their father, Lucas (Nikolaj Coster-Waldau) and his girlfriend, Annabel (Jessica Chastain). After a few weeks, they notice that something has followed them home and that their "friend" Mama may not be as imaginary as they thought.

With a very complex backstory which, in the end, is very simple, 'Mama' stands alone from other horror movies. It is very obvious that writer and director, Andres Muschietti, put a lot of time and care into this movie, which makes 'Mama' a diamond in the rough.

GOOD FOOD & DRINK

FINE DINING AT AFFORDABLE PRICES BECKHAM GRILL

I am fully aware that times are tough and when you are going to spend your hard earned dough, you want to feel that you got your monies worth. I thought about changing the name of the article to my money says, what do you think? I digress.

Beckham Grill has been around since 1977, originally named after owner Bob Beckham, it was known as Bechkam Place. There are new owners but the management remains the same. The restaurant by today's standards is "Old School," its not a dark restaurant but shows in a cozy and faintly lit. The Bar, or "The Crown Room," as it is familiarly known, is illuminated by the burst of a fireplace. There's an old Car decorating the outside, and a 1960s English style Telephone Booth starts you on a journey. Often I come to Beckham to sit in the bar by the fireplace, a soothing respite. Beckham Grill has an item which seems simple enough in the description, but I don't know of any other restaurant in Pasadena that serves it... Smoked Norwegian Salmon with Capers ($10.95). Seriously, I could order a double and have that alone for dinner, it's that good. That may not be your cup of tea, so, maybe you are here for meat? Roasted Prime Ribs of Beef is the specialty, always has been and I suspect always will be. Prices are ($26.90 to $32.95) for the Crown Cut, on my visit I ordered the End Cut at ($27.50). All the aforementioned items come with Yorkshire pudding, creamed Corn and creamed spinach. The menu is skillfully represented with fish, meat, duck, steak and salad. My dinner companion Mike Bingley from Charter Cable had the Duck for ($21.50), he gave it two thumbs up. No room for dessert on this visit, but next time for sure.

If it's a drink by the fireplace or a game of darts with some special friends, you may want to consider "Old School" dining. On Tuesday Nights all entrees are discounted at least 20%. Bloody Marvelous!!

JUST FOR BEST FRIENDS

POWERFUL & PRETENTIOUS PLANTS OF PREY

As naive as it may sound to some, there are times when I catch myself thinking of trees and plants as inanimate objects. While I know they are living organisms that feed us, help keep our air clean, and make the world around us far more beautiful than it would be without them, it is easy to forget that they are indeed as much alive as I am. I guess it's because they are so still and calm. They don't voice their opinions, the way humans and other animals do. The fact is, some of the living and breathing green fauna that we tend to take for granted growing around us is much more animated than we'd like to think. Indeed, some plant varieties are actually very active and very aware of the living, moving insects and other creatures they share their space with.

Plants that prey on bugs and small animals are the ones that fascinate me the most. For example, how amazing is the beast-like behavior of the Venus fly-trap? I remember seeing "Little Shop of Horrors" for the first time, and thinking the concept of a predator-like plant was nothing more than a figment of some very creative screen-writer's imagination, until I learned that those animal-like plants really do exist. I recently read a narrative posted on the Botanical Society of America's website: www.botany.org, all about plants that prey on foods other than nutrients found in water and soil. I hope you find it as interesting and fascinating as I did.

Carnivorous plants have the most bizarre adaptations to low-nutrient environments. These plants obtain some nutrients by trapping and digesting various invertebrates, and occasionally even small frogs and mammals. Because insects are one of the most common prey items for most carnivorous plants, they are sometimes called insectivorous plants. It is not surprising that the most common habitat for these plants is in bogs and fens, where nutrient concentrations are low but water and sunshine seasonally abundant. As many as thirteen species of carnivorous plants have been found in a single bog (Folkerts, 1982). Most plants absorb nitrogen from the soil through their roots. But carnivorous plants absorb nitrogen from their animal prey through their leaves specially modified as traps.

Traps work in a variety of ways. Pitfall traps of pitcher plants are leaves folded into deep, slippery pools filled with digestive enzymes. Flypaper (or sticky or adhesive traps) of sundews and butterworts are leaves covered in stalked glands that exude sticky mucilage. Snap traps (or steel traps) of the Venus flytrap and waterwheel plant are hinged leaves that snap shut when trigger hairs are touched. Suction traps, unique to bladderworts, are highly modified leaves in the shape of a bladder with a hinged door lined with trigger hairs. Lobsterpot traps of corkscrew plants are twisted tubular channels lined with hairs and glands.

Carnivorous plants are fascinating because, even when they are not trapping insects, their unusual forms are intriguing. However, you should not collect plants in the wild because most of them are relatively rare. Habitat destruction and over collection are two of the greatest conservation threats to carnivorous plants. If you are interested in growing carnivorous plants in your home or classroom, purchase the plants from a reputable grower who uses tissue culture or vegetative means to grow the plant, or starts them from seeds. We now know that the carnivorous habit evolved independently in many plant lineages (Albert et al., 1992; Ellison and Gotelli, 2001; Cameron et al., 2002; Muller et al., 2004). Pitfall traps evolved independently in four plant groups (the eudicot orders Caryophyllales, Oxalidales, Ericales, and the monocot family Bromeliaceae), and sticky traps, in at least three (the Caryophyllales, Ericales, and Lamiales). These are examples of convergent evolution. In contrast, the snap trap and lobster-pot traps evolved only once among carnivorous plants.

Carnivorous plants have features to attract, trap, kill, and digest prey, and absorb nutrients. A number of plants have only some of these characteristics. Glands that secrete sticky substances are found in many plants. Pitcher-like tanks are common in bromeliads and in few other plants. While perhaps not fully fledged sticky traps or pitfall traps, these features hint of the potential for carnivory. The list of plants described as near carnivorous, protocarnivorous, or borderline carnivorous is quite diverse, including Ibicella lutea (Mameli, 1916), Dipsacus (Christy, 1923), Passiflora foetida (Radhamani et al., 1995), Paepalanthus bromeloides (Jolivet, 1998), and Geranium viscosissimum and Potentilla arguta (Spomer, 1999). No single definitive list exists. Ibicella lutea, which has not been studied since 1916 (Uniper et al., 1989) is corneting listed as carnivorous and Cotoneis bertaroniona is corneting described as borderline. The ability to (Juniper et al., 1989), is sometimes listed as carnivorous, and Catopsis berteroniana is sometimes described as borderline. The ability to digest prey and absorb the amino acids is considered the real clincher.

Carnivory is more widespread than just the plant and animal kingdoms. The fungi kingdom has flesh eaters also (Pramer, 1964). Living in the soil are over 200 species of fungi (identified as zygomycetes, basidiomycetes, and hyphomycetes) that use special structures to trap nematodes. Like carnivorous plants, these fungi have the ability to trap prey and to absorb nutrients from the body of their prey. The traps of fungi come in two general types: constricting rings (active traps) and adhesive structures (passive traps). These trap types occur in separate fungi lineages (Ahren et al., 1998).

Exploring and learning more about the amazing world of carnivorous plant life somehow gave me a much wider perspective on how I view the greenery that surrounds me and makes our world the fascinating planet that it is. Lately I even find myself talking out loud to the trees and flowers I pass by while walking through the neighborhood. It's nice to know you're never alone, even when your 2-legged and 4-legged friends are not around, because after all, trees and plants are people

One Of A Kind: Featuring unique homes and gardens and the people who create them Story and Photos by Chris Bertrand

LeVeque Construction Blends a Reality

Check with 25 Years Experience economy ĥomeowners increasingly considering a remodel to update, upgrade or reconfigure their homes. Before pulling out the checkbook for the latest and greatest remodeling separate. By reconfiguring baths, adding privacy, trend, Jim LeVeque of LeVeque Construction highly recommends value planning between a general contractor and the client.

Born and raised in Sierra Madre and working across the San Gabriel Valley since 1988, LeVeque and his brother Anthony are celebrating their 25th business anniversary this year, continuing what they love to do best: delivering the best value for each client's project, whether it's a kitchen or bath remodel, a 'down to the studs' complete makeover or a custom built home.

"Gone are the days where homeowners just hand us a remodel wish list without carefully planning the budget and prioritizing their dream list," chuckled LeVeque. "It's critical to prioritize and plan to make sure the essentials are covered, as well as evaluating the realistic timeline for a needed return on their investment in the project."

Depending on that timeline reality, the answer to which parts of a project to choose, or deciding the price point may be quite different. "Do they have a five year plan to up or downsize? Do they plan to retire there and 'age in place' or do they intend to flip the house and sell immediately?"

'Ît's really important to take a look at maximizing the return on a remodel investment. I regularly switch between two hats, as I have a degree in Finance and Real Estate from Cal Poly, so I can analyze the project from a financial point of view," pointed out LeVeque. "When I put my hardhat back on to discuss the construction and aesthetic aspects, clients can feel comfortable that they're fully informed in making their decisions."

Trends in 2013 home remodeling are revolving around several themes, according to Anthony LeVeque, Jim's brother and business partner in charge of electrical, landscape, and technology.

"The biggest trend we see is moving multiple generations back under one roof," said Jim. Grandma and Grandpa are moving in... Kids picks up this spring, in their 30's and 40's are moving back home, sometimes with their children."

"As families consolidate their living arrangements," he continued, "we're fixing up a main family home, remodeling upstairs, downstairs, garages and basements to accommodate living together but widening passageways, fitting in a kitchenette or a separate entrance, we've had great success and delighted clients."

Sometimes, seemingly insurmountable floorplan and accessibility issues can now be solved with new products available. Tony LeVeque recounts their experience with a recent Rose Bowl area

"We were working with a family with wheelchair bound grandparents in a tri-level home. Most of the living area was inaccessible for the couple. Well into the project, the owners asked if it was possible to make some type of change to allow wheelchair access to the upstairs. We were able to find a spot off the front door to add a compact elevator in an aesthetically attractive way."

"Five to seven years ago, these products were a real luxury," reflected Tony. "Now, they're not mainstream, but definitely a lot more affordable and achievable, allowing wheelchair access to more of the home, instead of being relegated to one level."

"Energy efficiency and consistency are two big areas in today's remodel requests," says Anthony. "Of course, LED lighting options are expanding exponentially, with their attendant electrical usage reduction, and reduced heat generation, especially compared to halogen and incandescent lighting. Insulation products available today are definitely more green and better for the installer as well as the homeowner living in it, using recycled components. We rarely use fiberglass anymore."

'Some of our clients have 'had it' with unreliable power and frequent interruptions especially in the last two years," reflected Anthony, "and hardwired backup generators on natural gas. Two companies, Kohler and Onan, long known for commercial backup power hospitals, now offer great residential systems." "With natural gas, there's no storage diesel tank, and they're soundproofed to make them quiet. We install them up on the roof where they're hidden. The technology actually self tests the unit regularly. The systems are designed to sense when power is lost, then starts up to transfer the load within 20 seconds. When utility power is restored, it automatically transfers back, again within 20 seconds."

Another area that initially might be regarded as decadent is installing radiant heat floor heat in the bathroom. "Especially if a household has residents on different schedules, like one showering at 430 a.m. and another not til 8, radiant floor heat is a great alternative to heating the whole house in the morning," said Anthony. "When our feet are warm, the ambient temperature doesn't need to be as high to be comfortable. The radiant systems with time and temperature settings actually save rather than waste energy."

One of the most "comforting" trends isn't new at all. As American as apple pie and Mayberry, the resurgence of the front porch as the outside living room is a favorite project for the LeVeques.

"We're seeing homeowners wanting to reconnect with their neighbors and utilize the front porch as an outdoor living space. They want to wave to their neighbors, watch the kids play out front, and have coffee or a drink out front. We love creating a personal, welcoming area, and it definitely adds value to the home. When it's time for resale, buyers seem to be really drawn to a home with a welcoming front porch!" LeVeque Construction is celebrating years quality construction in the San Gabriel Valley. They hold CA General Contractor License

#599887, and several additional specialty #72993 B1, C10, C20 and HIC licenses. Follow them at www. LeVequeConstruction.com or call 626-305-9490. Have a story idea for "One of a Kind"? Contact Chris today with the details at C.Bertrand@ MtnViewsNews.com.

Tips of the Trade: Real Estate Revealed

by Luther Tsinoglou Realtor®

EXPOSE YOURSELF

There is much debate among real estate professionals about the value of holding an Open House. Some insist these events help get the house sold. Others argue it's an outdated practice in the digital age of virtual tours. However, it's been estimated that nearly half of all buyers who visit open houses first learned about them on the Internet.

With all the time and money that an agent puts into marketing your home, an Open House puts those very targeted buyers inside your home and in front of your representative. One of the best aspects of the Open House is the feedback that visitors provide, feedback that can suggest you change your approach or make needed improvements.

Aside from interest generated by the Web, the signs your agent places may also attract curious passersby. While they may not be making a purchase themselves, they may very well know someone who is. An Open House also helps to create a sense of urgency among those who visit, particularly when they see that other buyers are showing interest.

Obviously, a successful Open House exposes your property to a broad base of buyers, but even if only three people visit and one makes an offer, it was clearly worth it. Not all homes are ideal candidates for this type of marketing, so ask your agent about the possibilities.

CAR SHOPPING TIPS FOR OLDER DRIVERS

THE GOOD LIFE

Dear Savvy Senior:

Dear Older:

What resources can you recommend to seniors who are shopping for a car? My wife and I are relatively healthy 70-year-olds and are looking for a new senior-friendly vehicle, but could use some help. Older Drivers

For seniors who are in the market for a new or used car, the AAA (American Automobile Association) and the University of Florida's Institute for Mobility, Activity and Participation has just updated an excellent resource called "Smart Features for Older Drivers" that can help you choose a vehicle that meets your needs as you age.

Senior-Friendly Vehicles

While the automotive industry doesn't make vehicles specifically designed for senior citizens, they do make certain vehicles with features that can help accommodate the needs of older drivers.

With that in mind, "Smart Features for Older Drivers" addresses the age-related physical changes – like diminished vision, arthritis, and range of motion loss – that can affect a senior's driving ability and comfort behind the wheel, and outlines various vehicle features that help address those issues. Here's what they recommend.

Safety First

The first priority is to identify vehicles with a proven safety record which you can research online at safercar.gov and iihs.org/ratings. Also look for vehicles that have dynamic stability control, anti-lock brakes, adjustable head restraints, and side and dual-stage/threshold airbags that adjust the deployment force based on the severity of the crash.

Your next step is to identify specific vehicle features that can help meet your physical needs. So depending on what ails you, here's what to look for.

Hip and knee problems: For comfort, a better fit, and easier entry and exit, look for vehicles that have six-way adjustable power seats that move the seat forward and backward, up and down, and the seat-back forward and backward. Also look for low door thresholds and seat heights that don't require too much bending or climbing to get into. The ideal seat height for seniors is between mid-thigh and lower buttocks when standing next to the vehicle. Leather or faux leather seats are also easier to slide in and out of than cloth seats.

Stiff upper body: If you have difficulty looking over your shoulder to back up or merge into traffic, look for vehicles with a large rear window for better visibility, wide-angle mirrors which can minimize blind spots, back-up cameras, active parallel park assistance, and blind-spot warning systems that alert you to objects in the way. Also, for comfort and fit, consider vehicles that have a tilt and telescoping steering wheel, adjustable seatbelts, and heated seats with lumbar support.

Arthritic hands: For easier use, four-door vehicles are recommended because the doors are smaller, lighter and easier to open and close than two-door models. And to help with painful gripping and turning problems, look for keyless entry and a push-button ignition, a thicker steering wheel, power mirrors and seats, and a sliding channel gear selector.

Diminished vision: Drivers with vision loss due to cataracts, glaucoma or some other condition will find vehicles with larger instrument panels and dashboard controls with contrasting text easier to see and manipulate. And those with sensitivity to glare will benefit from extendable sun visors, auto-dimming rearview mirror and glare reducing side mirrors.

Smart Features Resource

To access the "Smart Features for Older Drivers" resource, visit SeniorDriving.AAA.com/SmartFeatures and use their online tool that lets you choose the age-friendly features you want in a vehicle, and the tool will identify the makes and models that best fit your needs.

Or, if you don't have internet access call your AAA (call 800-222-4357 to get your local number) and ask them to mail you free copy of the "Smart Features for Older Drivers" brochure. You don't have to be a AAA member to get this free publication.

Send your senior questions to: Savvy Senior, P.O. Box 5443, Norman, OK 73070, or visit SavvySenior. org. Jim Miller is a contributor to the NBC Today show and author of "The Savvy Senior" book.

KATIE Tse ..........This and That DIRTY OLYMPICS

Growing up without a TV, I've never been up on current events. However, it'd be hard to escape coverage of Lance Armstrong's recent doping confession.

Yes, what's long been suspected is now undeniable: Lance was taking human growth hormone, testosterone, oxygenated blood, "Pop Rocks" with Red Bull, and who knows what else. A hero defrocked. So sad. But let's not get too self-righteous; if the man says "everyone was doing it," who are we to judge?

I do not, in any way, condone the use of illegal, potentially harmful artificial stimulants (except perhaps caffeine --as in coffee, not Red Bull). Of course, injecting yourself with hormones or doctored blood can't be good for you. But we have these competitions, such as the Olympics and the Tour de France, etc. For the majority of athletes, this is their only opportunity to shine before they succumb to the inevitable pitfalls of age and injury. And to top it off, they're probably competing against others who are cheating with the letter form of dening. And let's not for with the latest form of doping. And let's not forget all the lying regarding participants' ages (and sometimes gender). That girl twirling through the air is so young that that she has no discernable hips, but they claim she's 16. You can't blame her parents for not keeping birth records in the wilds of rural North Korea.

To say it's unfair is a gross understatement. But how do we right this wrong? Like the market for illegal drugs, the practice isn't going to stop just because someone says it's not allowed. No matter how sophisticated pre-game testing gets, there are still going to be the persistent few (or many) who lie and shoot up with some contraband substance.

I propose a new approach to this perennial problem. Why not have our same competitions, but allow everyone to use whatever enhancing substances they choose? There'd have to be a comprehensive legal waiver; something along the lines of "If your chest explodes while racing to the finish line, we're not responsible." "Managers of child laborers assume all liability."

Some might find this morbid or immoral. But I don't consider it any worse than the standards we have now. There could, of course, be "clean" games to offset "dirty" ones. For these competitions, participants would have to actually follow the rules. Of course, there probably wouldn't be the spectacular feats of human strength and endurance we're used to seeing --primarily because the athletes would be limited to their actual human strength and endurance. But even these events would probably soon become as contaminated as our current system.

At the end of the day, it's no doubt best to simply acknowledge the achievements of those who've won. Don't give them ten million dollars. Don't sign them up for sponsorship contracts. Don't plaster their face on boxes of Wheaties. Don't make them into some kind of moral role model for schoolchildren. They didn't find a cure for cancer or save a village in Africa. They won a race. Maybe if we kept things in perspective, athletes and their coaches wouldn't feel driven to such acts of chicanery. In the meantime, we might choose to find a channel that's not sensationalizing Armstrong's fall from grace. And we can look forward to the 2016 games in Rio. Oh, boy.

FOR YOUR FUNNY BONE

This is a true account as recorded in the Police Log of Sarasota, Florida. An elderly lady did her shopping and upon returning to her car, found four males in the act of leaving with her vehicle. She dropped her shopping bags and drew her handgun, proceeding to scream at the top of her voice, "I have a gun and I know how to use it! Get out of the car!" The four men didn't wait for a second invitation. They got out and ran like mad. The lady, somewhat shaken, then proceeded to load her shopping bags into the car and got in the driver's seat. She was so shaken that she could not get her key into the ignition. She tried and tried and then it dawned on her why. For the same reason she did not understand why there was a football, a Frisbee and two 12 packs of beer in the front seat! A few minutes later, she found her own car parked four or five spaces farther down. She loaded her bags into the car and drove to the police station to report her mistake. The sergeant to whom she told her story couldn't stop laughing. He pointed to the other end of the counter where four pale men were reporting a carjacking by a mad, elderly woman carrying a large handgun. No charges were filed. If you're going to have a senior moment, make it memorable!

Did you hear about the scientists who crossed a sheep with a porcupine? They got an animal that knits its own sweaters. (Groaning is recommended)

HOWARD Hays As I See It

"Uh, I don't know what you mean." - Sen. James Inhofe (R-OK)

"I need to have more details. I, you know, I just need – you need to ask me after I've talked to our judiciary staff in our office." - Sen. Bob Corker (R-TN)

"I've got - my wife's here. I'm sorry." - Sen. John Barrasso (R-WY)

"I'm going to look at it." - Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY)

"I'm still looking at it." - Sen. Susan Collins (R-ME)

I wasn't planning on submitting a column this week, but couldn't help transcribing this series of responses from Republican senators when asked their view on a proposal that's been prominent in the news lately. It's not a complicated one, being supported by 92% of Americans, according to a recent CBS News / NY Times poll.

I wasn't going to think about a column; just enjoy 3 1/2 balmy days in Hawai'i. It was a sort of family reunion; my wife and I got together with in-laws from the greater-Tokyo area, meeting more-or-less halfway.

I was heading out to enjoy breakfast at the beach, but had to stop at the computer in the hotel lobby, unable to let a weekend go by without going online to learn what concerns Greg Welborn this week. It appears to be a hypocritical "concern for public interest out of Hollywood" despite "connections between the glorification of violence in movies and video games to the incidence of violence" in the real world that "saddens and disgusts" Greg.

I've visited Japan a few times, and found they enjoy violent movies and violent video games. Here in the U.S. we enjoy violent movies and violent video games. In 2008, in the U.S. we had 11,030 homicides by guns, or 3.6 per 100,000 of population. In Japan they had 11 homicides by guns, or less than .0001 per 100,000 of population. I'm sure "Django Unchained" will be a big hit in Japan, but I don't think it'll affect that disparity in homicide rates. We have lax gun laws. They have strict gun laws. The problem, Greg, is not the "violence in movies and video games".

Greg characterizes as "nonsense bordering on pathological falsehood" President Obama's concern over "de-funding scientific or medical research into the causes of gun violence", insisting "there is no group of conservatives standing in the way of science and research". No?

A Washington Post editorial last July told how from 1986 through 1996 the U.S. Centers for Disease Control conducted research on gun injuries and fatalities as it did on auto accidents. Some findings proved unflattering to the gun industry, such as those published in the New England Journal of Medicine showing that residents in households with a gun faced almost three times the incidence of homicide, and five times the incidence of suicide, as residents of households without guns.

The editorial relates how the NRA turned to their "point man" in Congress, Rep. Jay Dickey (R-AR), to mobilize other Republicans in stripping $2.6 million in funding from the C.D.C for 1997, the amount spent on gun research the year before. Since then, the C.D.C. spent $240 million a year on auto safety, and nothing on gun safety – though the number of annual fatalities from guns and auto accidents is about the same.

It cites "strong agreement now that scientific research should be conducted into preventing firearm injuries". The editorial quotes President Obama, "Such violence, such evil is senseless", but notes, "What is truly senseless is to decry these deaths as senseless when the tools exist to understand causes and to prevent these deadly effects."

The editorial is co-authored by that same (now former) Rep. Dickey, who had a change of heart following last-year's massacre at the Aurora, CO movie theater.

I wasn't going to do a column this week, but just send Susan this picture of me standing in front of a rather non-descript house on a narrow street in the hills north of Honolulu. To the North and East lies the University of Hawaii; across the street is a Baptist church where, on Sundays such as when I was there, the sides of the church roll up allowing rich voices to echo in song throughout the neighborhood.

Back in the 1960s the house was occupied by Stan and Madelyn Dunham, along with their grandson, Barry Obama – who stayed there until moving with his mother to Indonesia at the age of six.

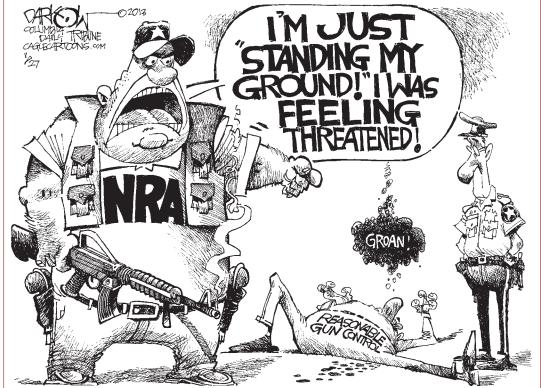

The next day I woke up early to catch the Inaugural Address. In an opening shot, the ABC cameraman focused on the statue atop the Capitol dome, around whose base the motto "E Pluribus Unum" provided the theme for the president's speech. (I also, I think, heard Diane Sawyer mistake Dick Gregory for Morgan Freeman.) Later that morning, I caught a bit of the MLK Day parade down Kalakaua Avenue in front of our hotel, with shops offering souvenirs and memorabilia celebrating "Our First Hawaiian President".

The proposal the senators were responding to in the opening quotes was for federally mandated universal background checks for gun purchasers. In addition to having the support of 92% of Americans, it also has the support of 89% of Republicans, 93% of gun households, and 85% of households with NRA members.

Lawmakers such as those quoted above are in the awkward position of lacking the courage to stand up to the gun lobby, while knowing they're on the wrong side of history.

Those senators would probably respond the same way to another suggestion involving the course of history – so go back and re-read their responses imagining the question was: Doesn't it now appear likely Barrack Obama will be recalled as not just our first Black president, or first Hawaiian president, but rather as one of our nation's truly great presidents?

Aloha.

WHAT DIFFERENCE DOES IT MAKE? GREG Welborn

In about six hours of testimony before Congressional panels, Hillary Clinton finally spoke about the Benghazi disaster and "took responsibility" while also telling us she wasn't really responsible for all that much. It's ironic how much taking, but not taking, responsibility is similar to her husband's earlier defense, "it depends on what the definition of the word 'is' is", but the most ignominious moment came with her claim that trying to figure out who lied about what really happened won't make a difference and is just a big waste of time.

We will give the Secretary credit for being a skilled and well-prepped witness, and she's always been a pretty darn good typical politician - in the not-very-complimentary sense of being able to evade answers and avoid blame. She blamed the failure to protect the diplomatic compounds on "the assistant secretary level or below", and then added that Congress should take the heat because it hadn't given enough aid to Libya.

It is truly Orwellian to hear that she is not complicit in the deaths of 4 Americans, because she was derelict in her duty to read the actual requests for greater security written by her own Ambassador. For most people, the "I didn't know it was wrong, daddy" excuse doesn't work after age 5 or so. Give her credit for being able to milk that for a few more decades, and in front of a national audience no less. Where were the Pulitzer Prize- hungry investigative reporters, anyway? Does nobody in the D.C. press corps find that an implausible, pitiful excuse?

The same goes for the Libya aid deflection. Just in case some reporter actually cut through the earlier B.S. about not reading cables, it supposedly wouldn't have mattered because security at U.S. diplomatic compounds in Libya are somehow the responsibility of the Libyans, who didn't get enough money from the U.S. Congress to do their job well. If that were true, doesn't it stand to reason that Secretary Clinton should have been upset several months prior about Congress's failure to protect the embassies? Why wasn't she pounding the table way back then about the risk exposure?

As deplorable as the "it's not my fault" and "I didn't know" excuses are from someone who has presidential aspirations, the most shameful moment came when she fired back at Senator Johnson for caring about who lied to the American people. "What difference, at this point, does it make?" she retorted, insinuating that because so much time has already passed and the 4 Americans are already dead it doesn't really matter who said what to whom for what reason.

Dear readers, we have a new political doctrine: the Hilary doctrine. If enough time has passed and if uncovering the truth won't bring the dead back to life, then there's no legitimate reason to expose the cover up and punish those responsible. So, let me apply the Hilary Doctrine historically.

supposedly knowing about and covering up the Iran-Contra arms-for-hostages deal. Just a big waste of time looking into that one.

To President George H.W. Bush: Told Americans to read his lips; there would be no new

To President Ronald Reagan: Investigated for, and hounded by the liberal press, for taxes. That lie shouldn't have cost him the election. What were we thinking?

To President Bill Clinton: Disbarred from practicing law because he committed perjury. What a travesty of justice that one was; aren't lawyers supposed to lie under oath?

To President George W. Bush: Never heard the end of the "Bush lied and people died" mantra from the left. What was Kerry thinking in trying to build a presidential campaign around that theme? I guess I'm glad the man didn't become president if he's that clueless.

The point here is not to claim that one or any of these political leaders did or did not lie to the American people. The point is that investigating the accusation that they lied was, is, and will always be a legitimate – one might even add necessary – function of political opponents, the press, and the American people at large. If we want to be able to trust our leaders, then there have to be consequences for lying to us. We'll never change human nature. People lie, people steal, people commit all manner of sin. What keeps the sin in check is some sense that if caught there will be a consequence for those sins.

So, Madam Secretary, the reason that it makes a difference at this point as to who lied to America about Benghazi is because we want to make sure that affixing legitimate blame and meting out appropriate consequences sends a clear message to those who might be tempted to try such things in the future. As a smart women, trained lawyer and presumptive presidential candidate, you know that. Deterrence has always been, and will always be, a legitimate justification for punishments.

As a smart women, trained lawyer, and presumptive presidential candidate, Madam Secretary, you also know that if you had a hand in the lie, your political career would rightly be brought to an end, and you are willing to insult the memory and families of 4 dead Americans by claiming that none of this matters in order to keep your political dreams alive. That's pathetic.

Independent's Eye

Say a prayer. Put up a tombstone that reads "R.I.P." for three prevailing political conventional wisdoms that seem to be quickly biting the dust.

The first is that President Barack Obama will always go along to get along, will in the end inevitably choose a mediated, moderate course to gain partial victories. That conventional wisdom is on life support as the more aggressive post-re-election-election Obama stresses that he doesn't face re-election, he's had enough of Republican roadblocks, and he's going to draw lines in the sand. Being the first Democratic President since Franklin D. Roosevelt and the last President since Dwight Eisenhower to twice win a popular vote majority can do that to you.

Signs this CW was dying: Obama's ignoring GOP conservative opposition to do a full-court-press on naming former Senator Chuck Hagel as Secretary of Defense; Obama's strong fiscal cliff position that led to partial Republican capitulation; Obama's inaugural address which The Daily Beast's John Avlon called a Lincolnesque liberal manifesto; and his decision to convert his legendary political operation into an activist group and political action committee. Will the Koch Brothers and Karl Rove's Crossroads GPS meet their match?

Let's see if former Mayor Rudy Giuliani and former Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin are still sneering about Obama being a lowly "community organizer" in 2014 and

The second decaying CW is that America's middle is dead. Immediately after Obama's 2008 election, I had lunch with a well-known commentator in New York City who accurately told me: "Joe, the center is under attack." And that's the way it was from the moment Obama took his first oath of office with Republicans blocking some of his key proposals to the birth of the moderate-Republicanhunting Tea Party, to the shellacking Obama and the Democrats received in the 2010 mid-term elections.

But now the center seems aroused -- and fed-up. Obama won re-election with a coalition of his party's base, rising demographic groups and, polls show, a big, fat chunk of moderate voters.

Democratic liberals and Republican conservatives (uh, oh, here come the political equivalency police) BOTH tend to dismiss it as "the Mushy Middle," but at key points throughout American history our political center has proven to be "The Mighty Middle" and there are signs of its resurgence again.

The moderate Republican group Republican Main Street Partnership decided to remove "Republican" from its name to try and attract centrist Democrats. Some strident radio and cable conservative talkers face ratings erosion. Liberal MSNBC's ratings are on the rise and center-hugging CNN could get more viewers as its new boss Jeff Zucker leaves his imprint. And poll numbers show a shift.

The Republican Party got a 49 percent negative number in a recent NBC News/Wall Street Journal, the lowest number since 2008, and only a 28 percent positive. The GOP's spiritual center, the Tea Party, got its lowest number yet: a 23 percent favorable rating. Republican pollster Frank Luntz, in an op-ed in the Washington Post, warned Republicans that they need to start watching their language, which will turn off more voters than attract them. In other words: to win elections Republicans must start sounding like serious problem solvers rather than aspiring talk radio hosts.

This is seemingly sinking in with (some) Republicans. Gone are threats about throwing the country into default. Senate Republicans vow there will be more compromise. Republicans at various levels now suggest the party is ready to do serious immigration reform, because they know the GOP needs binders full of Latinos to win future elections.

The third dying conventional wisdom is that Obama would be "another FDR," or "another Carter," as some say maybe he'll be "another Reagan." In reality, what we are likely seeing may be birth of a NEW "another" category -- the precise negative or positive meaning to be revealed by the end of Obama's term: one day a future President may be branded "another Obama."

MY NEW YEAR'S DIET FITS ME TO A T-SHIRT

Personally, I sure will be glad when confession is good for the soul, then let me have a good soul cleansing and confess that January is not body else who will listen that I always my favorite month of the year. At the beginning of each year, a certain resident in our home begins acting like an angel and starts harping about a diet. But, not just "a diet." I could take that, I has to do with her is a question I have

One of my New Year's resolutions is to ask no question I do not want to hear the answer. Believe me when I say ignorance

The Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage is a health nut, whereas, I am just a plain nut with lots of fudge icing on the top. As nuts are concerned, I prefer nuts with and I have this conversation about the upcoming diet. I need to correct myself here. When I use the word "conversation," I probably should use the word "monologue." When it comes to diets, I have absolutely nothing to say. My wife on the other hand, has plenty to say and when she is saying it to me, she holds nothing back.

When it comes to diets and dieting, I have my own ideas about the whole matter. I do not see myself as fat, just postthin. For arguments sake, let's say I am fat. I take refuge in the Bible along this line, which says, "All the fat is the Lord's" (Leviticus 4:16b KJV).

If I was to argue with my wife, which I promise you I am not going to, I could lay all of the blame about my being postthin on her. I have pictures to prove my point. Before we got married, I was very thin. Now look at me! I don't have to draw a picture for you, do I?

Along this line of diets, I think I am doing rather well. I have come up with ideas that have made me quite comfortable along this line.

Last week I bought a dress shirt and brought it home. When I tried it on it Nothing is more important in my daily was three sizes too big for me making me look rather thin. I love that shirt. That shirt was made for people like me. Every time I wear that shirt in public somebody usually says, "You must've lost a lot of weight." I just smile.

I have other shirts in my closet that have brought me no end of grief. Here is what I want to know. Why do my shirts get thin but I don't? After all, we go to the same places and eat at the same restaurants. There is something here I believe I am missing!

Whenever I am off on a trip somewhere my wife always says just as I leave, "Make January is over. If sure that you watch what you eat while you're away.' I am delighted to report to her or anywatch what I eat. After all, I would hate to take a bite of broccoli by mistake. Therefore, I watch every bite I eat to make sure it is as delicious as possible. My wife is always encouraging me to think. Rather, "my diet." What my diet eat more fruit. I believe fruit is a matter of personal opinion and preference. My wife believes that bananas are fruit. I, on the other hand, believe that a banana split is fruit. My wife has the idea that an Apple a day keeps the doctor away. I have a different slant on that idea. I believe an Apple Fritter a day keeps everybody away. When it comes to salads, my wife is the crowned queen of salads. She has a golden touch when it comes to mak-Every year right after Christmas and ing salads. If I am not careful, she will serve me a salad three times a day. Another thing I need to watch out for with her salads. Occasionally, she will try to slip in some form of broccoli. For some unknown reason she believes broccoli is the panacea for all ills nutritionally.

As diets come and go, my diets usually go without leaving a trace behind them. Years ago, I got serious about a diet and was determined to lose 25 pounds of ugly fat. Much to my chagrin, I lost the other fat instead. Now look at me!

The diet phase is beginning to run its course as we come to the close of January. Towards the end of January, my lovely bride begins thinking of Valentine's Day. For me, whatever gets her attention off my diet is good news any day of the week.

I suppose it is true what people say that you are what you eat. I further suppose that it is important to eat the right things. Not only is that true physically but also spiritually. The Bible has something to say about this.

"As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby" (1 Peter 2:1 KJV).

routine than feasting on the Word of God. I may not do very well on my physical diet, but I do take special care about my spiritual diet.

Self-storage is expensive and relieving home-storage is always pleasing to the fire department, fire inspectors and insurance companies.
